Dear Dave and Leona:

By this letter I give you permission to post my book The Columbus City Graveyards on your Franklin County Cemetery website, currently www.genealogybug.net/Franklin_Cemeteries, and successor sites. This permission is on condition that the copyright notice be maintained, as well as a statement that it is used with permission.

Very truly yours,

FOREWORD

This book was written out of a desire to prevent the feeling of frustration experienced by researchers when they learn that an old graveyard and its records no longer exist. I have experienced this with regard to early graveyards elsewhere, in Philadelphia and Houston, for example, and I hope that this effort will mitigate the feeling to some extent among those researching ancestors who lived in Columbus. My goal has been to replace such lacking official records and history for the graveyards owned by the City of Columbus, primarily the North and East Graveyards. The Franklinton Graveyard, which is now owned by the City, and the South Graveyard, which was owned by Franklin County but in which the City of Columbus had burial rights, are also included. The "Colored" graveyard in Franklin Township is also briefly discussed, since it was owned and used by residents of the city and it was established at least in part because of the treatment which black residents received from the city. The old Catholic and Jewish graveyards are excluded because they were privately owned and have been adequately discussed elsewhere. (See Raphael and Schlegel in the bibliography.)

In replacing a portion of the missing graveyard records, greatest thanks are due to the Green Lawn Cemetery Association, which through the years has kept one of the best sets of interment records known (a fact acknowledged by researchers as far away as New Jersey). The Association kindly allowed me to search through several of its books for notes of removals from the city graveyards. The Association is also to be commended for their care of the old tombstones and monuments which were moved into Green Lawn from the City graveyards over a century ago.

Various other sources of newspaper notices and miscellaneous records and historical data, as noted in the Bibliography and Sources, were supplied by the Ohio Historical Society, the Franklin County Genealogical Society, the Public Library of Columbus and Franklin County, the County Recorder's Office, County Engineer's Office, the Franklin County Clerk of Courts, the City of Columbus Engineering and Construction Office, and former Clerk of Council Vince Tumeo.

It was possible to identify some 2,210 interments in the North, East, Franklinton, and Colored graveyards, broken down approximately as follows: 440 known and 550 probable at the North Graveyard; 110 known and 335 probable at the East Graveyard; 135 known and 40 probable at Franklinton; 25 probable at the Colored graveyard; 575 probably interred at the North or East graveyards, but which one cannot be determined. In addition, names of 59 lot owners at the North and 12 at the East Graveyard were found. Even after many hours and much effort, this total is a small fraction, perhaps one-quarter to one-third, of all of the interments in the City graveyards. It is unfortunate that none of the sexton's records (or even John Graham's report of lot owners at the North Graveyard) could be found for use in this compilation. None would be happier than the author if the publication of this work would cause the private holder of some of these missing records to come forward and share them with researchers, even though too late to be included here.

On the evening of Friday, December 2, 1881, while the last removals were being completed in the Kerr tract of the old North Graveyard, a boy watching the workmen was observed to pick up something from the dirt and quickly put it in his pocket. Subsequently, he cautiously pulled his hand partly out of his pocket and a gentleman saw a heavy gold ring in his hand. One of the workmen, suspecting that the boy had found something of value, spoke to him, but the lad pretended not to hear and a minute or two later ran off as fast as his legs could carry him.

Those who delve into the past are, like the boy, searching for a treasure, an experience or lesson to make their own life easier or more meaningful, but without the suffering which may have accompanied the original experience. May each find his or her own "gold ring."

of chaincarriers, markers, etc., engaged in the surveying of lands and locating warrants, in the Virginia Military District, west of the Scioto; and in the month of August, 1797, he laid out the town of Franklinton." Thus begins the first History of Franklin County, that of William T. Martin published in 1858. The first settlers of Franklinton, which was the first settlement of whites in the Scioto Valley north of Chillicothe, arrived in the fall or winter after its platting. With their arrival came the need for a place of burial. According to documents provided by a descendant of Lucas Sullivant at the time of the Columbus sesquicentennial in 1962, that burial place, still known as the Franklinton Cemetery, was dedicated to public use in 1799.

The largest part of the selected site was on a northward-jutting portion of the relatively high ground on which the town was laid out, bound on the south by Water Street of the town plat and on the northeast by the Scioto River. The western boundary of the property extended to the present Souder Avenue, and remained there as late as 1830. At that time an alteration of the Franklinton-Dublin road began at the northwest corner of the town plat of Franklinton "from which the S.W. corner of the grave yard bears N 48O E 2 poles 22 links," or about 48 feet.

The western portion of this land, which was in an ancient course of the river, at some later date (which has been impossible to determine precisely) was struck off for use in another alteration of the road. Compensation apparently was made for this loss by the extension of the property on the south, by sixty-four feet, into the original Water Street right-of-way. The northern limit of the graveyard was established by 1846, when William S. Sullivant sold off the "mill property" there.² The eastern boundary's early position is unclear, since the first description in a deed was not made until 1881.³ Some early maps show a road along the bank of the river next to the graveyard. The original graveyard seems to have embraced about two acres, whereas the present fence encloses about 1.6 acres.

The Franklinton Graveyard almost became church property at an early date. In 1811 the erection of a small, brick church on the property was begun through the generosity of Lucas Sullivant, for the First Presbyterian Church of Franklin County, which had been organized in Franklinton a few years earlier. On February 20, 1812 the First Presbyterian Society in Franklinton was incorporated by the state legislature.⁴ The only purpose of such an incorporation was to allow the society to hold real property, and thus it can be confidently inferred that the society intended to purchase the graveyard property, on which the new church was being built, before the next session of the legislature would meet in December of 1812. This intention was thwarted on that fateful day of June 18, 1812 when the sale of lots in the new town of Columbus was begun and war was declared on Great Britain. Franklinton became an important center of activities of the western army and the unfinished church in the graveyard was appropriated by the quartermaster's department for use as a granary and storehouse. In March of 1813 a violent storm blew the gable off of the small building and the stored grain, soaked by subsequent rain, swelled and burst its walls. The government paid to have the church replaced in 1815, but the new structure was built not in the graveyard but on the riverbank nearby.⁵

[Illustration of Franklinton Church, 1811, Gift of Lucas Sullivant]

The above drawing, published in 1886, was probably based upon drawings exhibited in 1856 at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Presbyterian congregation. It shows the church in the Franklinton Graveyard, with tombstones to the east and north and muddy Water street in front.

From a very early date the location of the graveyard could have been considered less than desirable. It was bordered on the north by the sawmill and the grist mill; it became even less desirable when cut off from the center of Franklinton by the first railroad, which was laid in 1851. However, it was protected and looked after by the citizens of the community. Martin's history (1858) reported that it "embraces a beautiful little locust grove, enclosed with a board fence," but also noted that the remains of Lucas Sullivant and wife, Lyne Starling, and General Foes and wife had already been removed to Greenlawn. Martin continued, "But still the Franklinton graveyard is rather a neat and handsome village cemetery, and is as well calculated to call up a train of solemn and interesting reflections as any other spot of ground in the county."⁶

The graveyard continued to be well cared-for and used for some time. It is now impossible to be certain, but the care of the property was probably in the hands of the trustees of Franklin Township. Certainly this was the case after 1865, when the legislature passed an act making it the duty of township trustees to take charge of any "lands set apart, appropriated, or dedicated as public burying grounds ... not under the care of any incorporated company, benevolent or religious society or association, or municipal corporation..." The latest date in any tombstone inscription copied there was 1871, but one newspaper account of 1906 reported a burial there about fifteen years earlier, or about 1890. The wooden fence remained at least until 1881, when a post was mentioned in a deed describing adjacent property.

By 1886 the graveyard was suffering some neglect. A newspaper article of that year described it as "very indifferently enclosed and in a distressing state of neglect. Cattle were roaming among the graves, many of the tombstones were broken or prostrated, and the inscriptions with which loving hands had undertaken to perpetuate the memory of friends were in many cases illegible."⁷

The property was brought within the corporate boundaries of Columbus in the annexation of October 27, 1890. Interments were prohibited from that time, for a city ordinance, dated September 29, 1890 prohibited interments within the city.⁸ It would seem that the township rightly gave up the care of the graveyard at this time but the city, which had the authority to take possession under the Ohio Municipal Code, neglected to do so for some sixteen years. This resulted in the continuation of the sad deterioration of the graveyard which was also worsened by construction of the Toledo & Ohio Central Railway on the levee between the graveyard and the river. By 1898 when some sixty-nine tombstone inscriptions were read there by William Pengelly, he could only describe the site as "disused."

In 1906 the Ohio Sun described the site in the following terms:

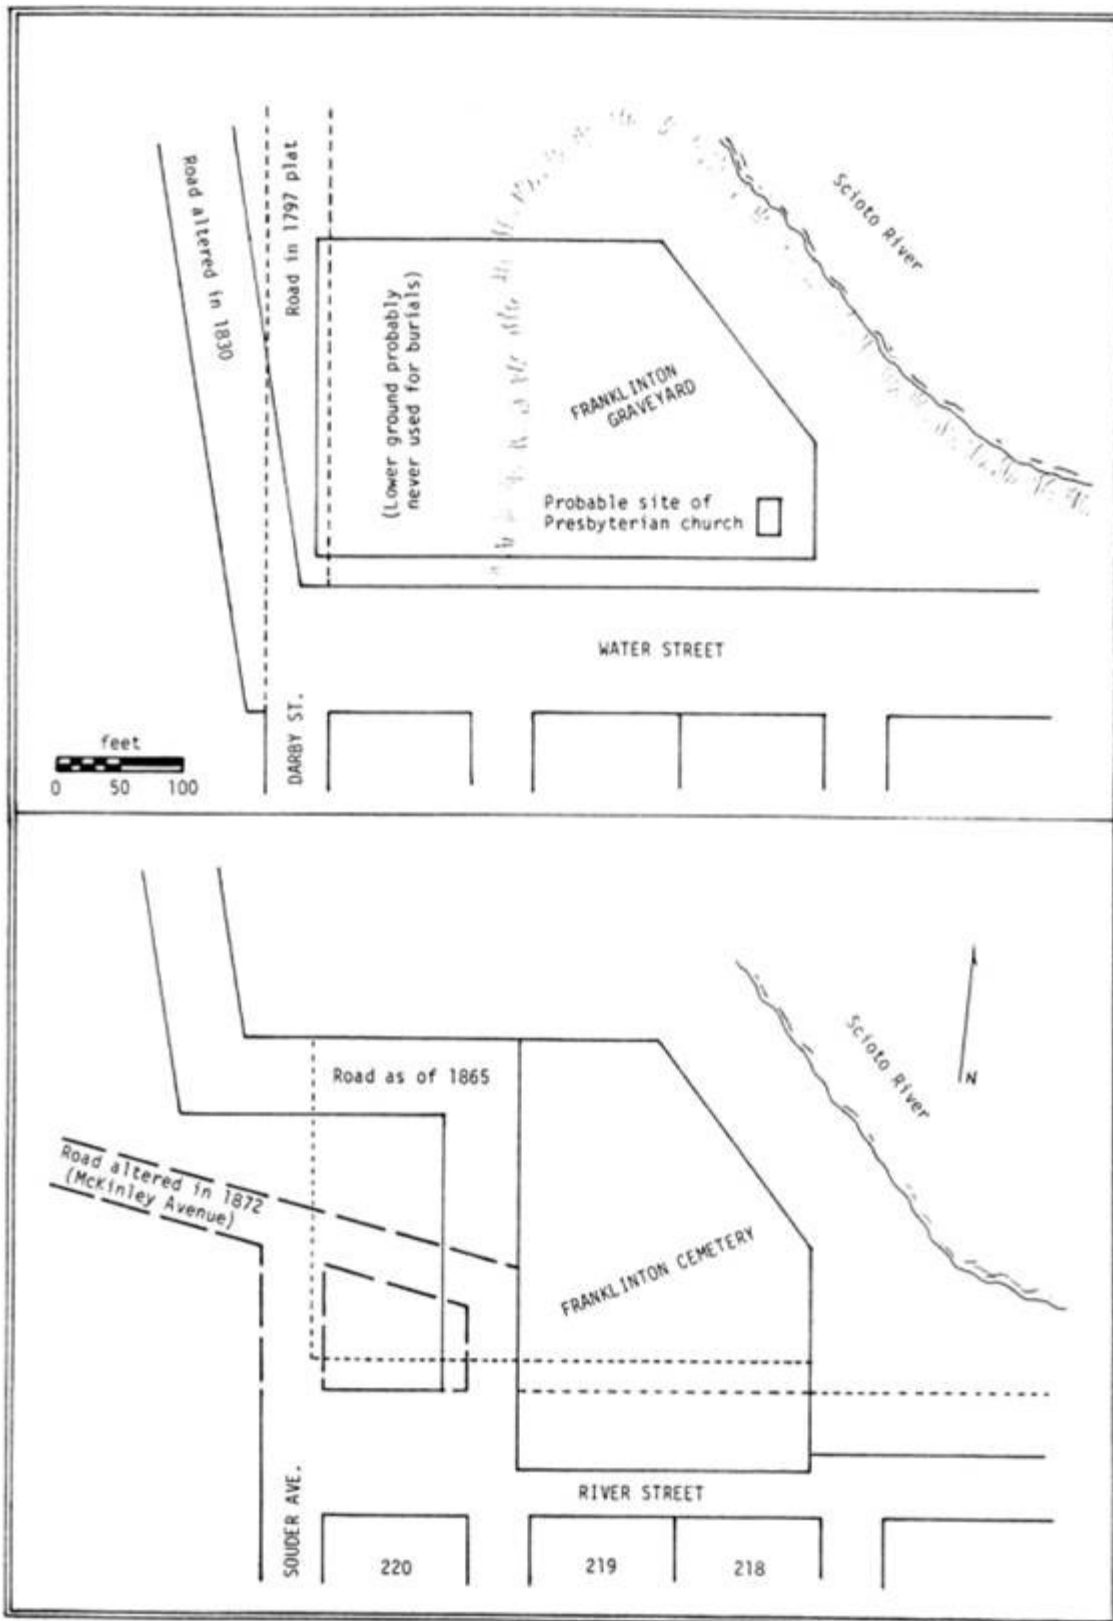

In the present day the old cemetery presents a truly pathetic view. Infringed upon by the widening of the railway on the north side, it is fronted on the south and west by two unpaved streets, which at most times of the year are muddy in the extreme. At the east end of the once beautiful little cemetery are a number of miserable huts marking the habitations of squatters. One may enter the cemetery without effort, as the fence kept up by the settlers of old has long rotted and followed into oblivion its makers. Throughout the whole graveyard the number of tombstones may be counted on the fingers, and these weary with the long wait of years, lean as if they, too, like their many companions, sink into the soil and are lost forever.

Another newspaper article describes the graveyard in the following bleak terms:

. . . in many cases the graves are so over run with weeds and vines that it is almost an impossibility to find the markers . . . There is no sanctity or sacredness whatsoever in the spot . . . Tramps and hoboes make the sacred plot one of rendezvous, where they gather . . . No fence encloses the grounds whatever . . .

This article, preserved at the Public Library of Columbus and Franklin County, is undated, but apparently was published in 1906; it mentions the burial of Mrs. Elizabeth Rhoades "about 15 years ago." It speaks of a movement started on the West Side and "agitated" by West Side citizens to repair and clean up the old graveyard, enclose it, and make it a beauty spot. City officials promised to trim the trees, clean out the lawns, and reset old markers and gravestones. City records show that the lot was surveyed in 1906 and the surveyor attempted to establish the City's title to the property.

In the 78 years since that time, the graveyard has been protected and honored by man but has suffered from the normal ravages of time. A visitor in the spring of 1984 found only five legible or partly legible tombstones: those of James Armitage, William Brown, Isabella Oharra, and Margaret Kelley, and a broken one identified from the 1898 reading as that of Hon. John A. M'Dowell. Another stone, a block marked "Charles Kemmerle 1867-1878," was obviously an intruder. Several other stones remained, broken off below their inscriptions. A marker at the River Street (originally Water Street) entrance, erected by the Franklin County Historical Society in 1962, proclaims that about 100 graves remained at that time, of which 71 were marked. The twenty-six foot obelisk erected in 1931 by the West Side Board of Trade remains in good condition. The property is protected by a four-foot stone fence and is maintained by the Columbus Recreation and Parks Department.

The Franklinton Graveyard

The property still suffers esthetically from its location in an industrial area, as it has for over a century, but the presence of responsible businessmen prevents the return of "squatters" and encourages the city's maintenance of the grounds. The graveyard is bordered on the east by a fence company. On the north and west the concrete block walls of a chemical company's shipping building intrude on the sensibilities, but these are soothed by the north-east side of the stone wall, which is backed by the wooded levee, on top of which lie the slowly decaying ties of the abandoned Toledo & Ohio Central Railroad.

It is probably because of its less than desirable location, along with its appeal as the oldest white burial ground in the county, that the Franklinton graveyard was not sold or turned to other purposes and has survived the three graveyards established by (or for the use of) the City of Columbus.

History of the North Graveyard

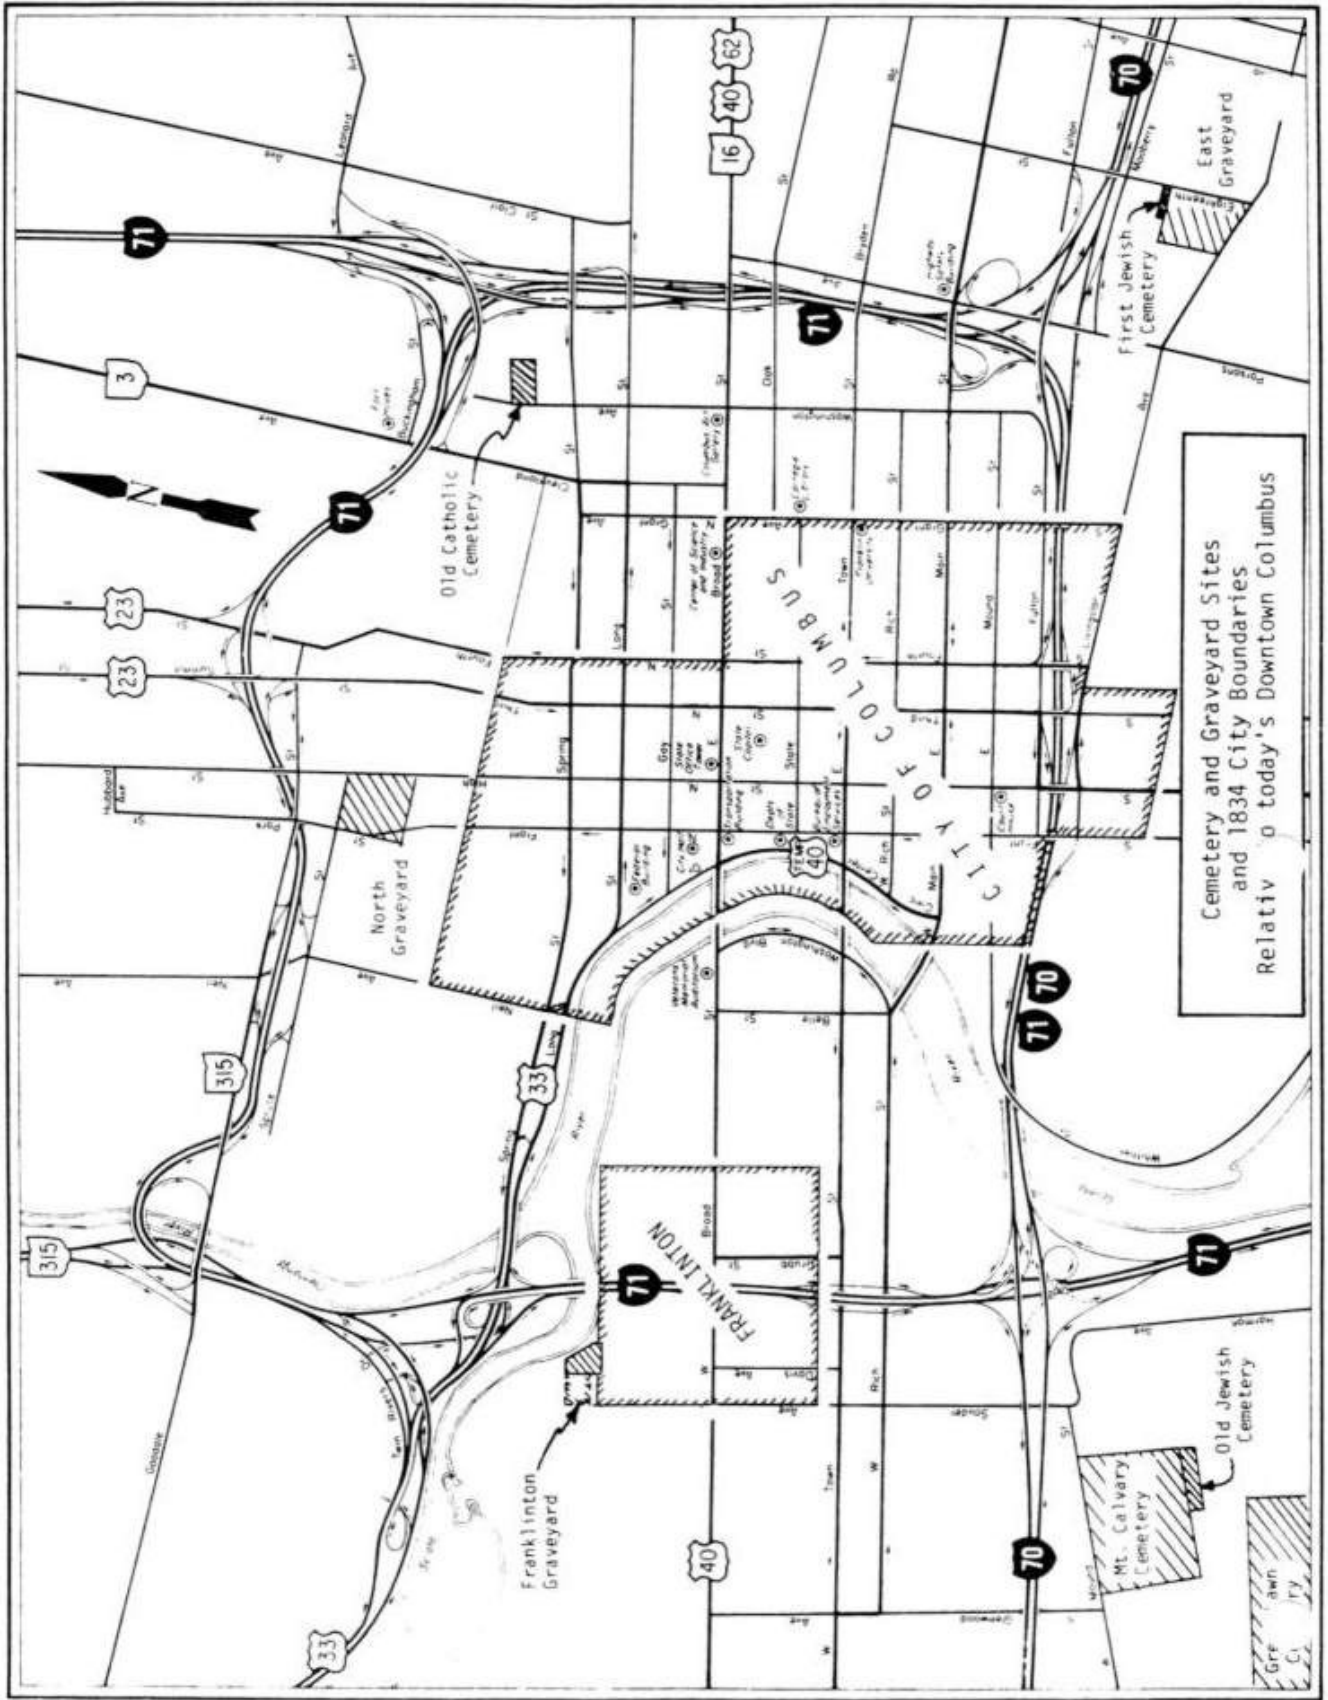

THE KERR TRACT

Some of the grandest buildings in the world have been tombs; such are the pyramids of Egypt, the castle of St. Angelo, and the Taj Mahal of India. Such magnificent edifices were not raised by the settlers of central Ohio, who were followers of the more modest traditions of the Jews, Greeks, Romans, and many other ancient nations in burying their dead in the ground. In Christian countries, the tradition of burial in a church yard evolved from the practise of placing near the altar the remains of the saint in whose name the church was dedicated.

In frontier Ohio, at the time of the founding of the town of Columbus in 1812, not only were magnificent edifices not raised to the dead, but there was not even any church or churchyard to accommodate this necessity of human occupation of the land. The four proprietors of the town therefore dedicated a small tract of land for use as a graveyard by the inhabitants of their new town on July 2, 1813. The land was in a wooded and somewhat swampy area (though the lot itself was not unusually wet), 825 feet north of the limits of the town plat, which then ended at North Public Lane (Naghten street). It measured 330 feet north and south and 198 feet east and west and contained one and one half acres.¹ The site is now the south-east corner of Park and Spruce streets. It is not clear what route was used to reach the graveyard from the town, but an extension of High street along its present route, as had been contemplated by the proprietors in laying out additional outlots, was probably used with an unofficial roadway through the intervening land.

One of the four proprietors of Columbus, John Kerr, had been named agent of the proprietors' association in April of 1813 and was authorized to execute a deed conveying the graveyard property to the borough. That he failed to execute such a deed at that time has been often remarked, without explanation. In fact, he was prevented from conveying the property by the non-existence of any legally constituted body to receive the gift; the borough of Columbus was not incorporated until 1816, by which time Kerr had declined any longer service as agent of the association and had been replaced as such by Henry Brown. The ground therefore, though dedicated and used as a graveyard, remained in private hands for some time.

The early years of Columbus were troubled by the War of 1812 and the ensuing depression. It was not until 1820 that the Borough Council began to take in hand any but the most essential of its responsibilities. Accordingly, it was not until May 8 of that year that council instructed the mayor to enquire into the title to the graveyard and to obtain a proper deed for it.² By that time title to the property had passed to John Kerr, the same original proprietor of the town and agent who had been authorized previously to convey the tract to the borough. John Kerr and Mary his wife conveyed the tract to the Mayor and Council of the Borough of Columbus in return for one dollar on June 6, 1821, as a public burial ground. Since the land, after dissolution of the proprietors' association, had become the private property of the Kerrs, the deed included a clause whereby the ground would revert to themselves or their heirs if it ceased to be used for burial purposes.

History of the North Graveyard

In addition, in 1820 the Council appointed John Kerr to present a petition to the County Commissioners to view and open a road from Columbus to the graveyard.³ What became of this petition is not known, but in 1823 the commissioners responded to a petition of Samuel Cumming and others and laid out a road about where North Park street is now located.⁴ It ran "from a point in the town of Columbus near the north end of Front Street, to intersect the road leading from Wilcox's tavern near the South line of John Starr's farm with the ostensible view of securing the approach to the graveyard or burying-ground, as well from the North as the South." This road remained in use for seven years; it was vacated in 1830 on petition of Lincoln Goodale when expansion of the graveyard made access from High street possible.

It was not until October 18, 1824 that the use and operation of the graveyard was formalized by the Council. An ordinance passed on that date provided for the appointment of a sexton, to "remain in office during the pleasure of the Council." The sexton's duties were:

to hold himself in readiness at all times, when called on, to dig graves, and to arrange in as regular order, as the situation of the ground will admit of all graves hereafter to be dug; and to provide himself with a suitable bier and lines, or straps, and if requested to attend at the house of the deceased, with the bier, and at the burying ground, and when the graves by him dug are settled, to fill them up and sod them over; and keep the ground clear of weeds, and put a padlock, or fastening on the gate...

The sexton's fee of $1.50 per adult and $1 per child's grave was set by the same ordinance, which also prohibited any other person from being paid for digging a grave and provided that all graves be dug under his inspection. By resolution, John Jones "of the north end of Columbus" was appointed sexton at the same Council session.⁵ Jones apparently continued on the job into October of 1827, when he was allowed $1.00 for cutting weeds and repairing the graveyard fence.⁶

THE DOHERTY TRACT

The old graveyard was the only burial place for the city through the 1820's. With no other burial place to relieve this graveyard, the borough found it necessary to expand the site. On December 11, 1829 the borough council resolved (and on January 8 ordered) that members Robert W. McCoy and Lincoln Goodale were appointed a committee to purchase from Colonel Doherty a lot adjoining the graveyard, with restrictions to pay not more than $400.⁷ The land in question reached east from the existing graveyard to the Columbus-Worthington road (High street) and south 330 feet toward the borough. The tract contained just under seven acres, making a total of 8.409 acres in the two graveyard tracts. William Doherty and Eliza his wife, who sold the lot to the mayor and council for $400 on February 26, 1830, reserved to themselves "so much of the ground now sold near a Beach tree as will be sufficient for a family burying ground."⁸

On March 2, immediately after the purchase, Messrs. McCoy and Goodale were appointed a committee of council to "Platt and Lay off the new burying ground into Lots also to arrange the price of Lots in the same." A portion of the lots were set apart for burial free of charge for the ground used. The burials in the free portion apparently were made in chronological order, for one newspaper account refers to "the 'cholera row' of 1849." According to Studer's history, "Another portion was set off for the sale of lots to colored persons." The only official reference found is an order of City Council, dated July 20, 1841, "that the Colored People be buried under the Direction of the North Sexton, and in the same manner that Strangers are buried."¹⁰ (The population of the city was about 6% "Colored" in the 1830's.)

No plat of the lots in the Doherty tract seems to have survived the years. However, clues to the arrangement of the Doherty tract were found in several places. These have been used to deduce the arrangement of the grounds as shown on the accompanying map. The arrangement is somewhat similar to the older portions of Union Cemetery, the only existing, large cemetery in the county which was contemporaneous with the North Graveyard. The arrangement is somewhat more crowded than Union Cemetery's. Because the reasoning behind the reconstruction of the plat involves the use of later records, it will be described in a special section below.

The plat shown is, of course, only an approximate reconstruction. Other pieces of information, some of which are mentioned below, make it clear that the northeastern portion of the Doherty Tract was wet, containing a swamp or pond, and was unsuitable for burials.

OPERATION UNDER THE ORDINANCE OF 1834

On July 8, 1834 the city council passed "An Ordinance respecting the Grave Yard of the City of Columbus." This ordinance provided for the annual appointment by council of a graveyard superintendent, whose duties would be "to take charge of the Grave Yard, to make sale of the unsold lots therein, to cause the fence about the same to be kept in proper order, to defray the expenses thereof out of the proceeds of the lots sold, to expend the balance of such proceeds in such manner as may be directed by the City Council, and to make report of his proceedings to the City Council at the end of each year." Any person desiring to purchase a lot in the graveyard was to pay five dollars to the superintendent and take his receipt to the mayor, who would write a deed for the lot in a specified form. The office of sexton was changed to an annual appointment by this ordinance, which also simplified the sexton's duties: "to keep the Grave Yard in proper order, and to dig graves whenever called on." The fee for his services was raised to two dollars for persons over fifteen years old and $1.50 for children under fifteen.

Though the deeds written by the mayor for graveyard lots were not in fee simple but were only "for a burying place," thirty-one were taken to the courthouse over the years by the purchasers and were recorded there, the first five such being dated 1833. (All such references can be found in the Consolidated List following this history.) Unfortunately for today's researchers, the plat of the graveyard was not recorded at the courthouse, the deeds referring to the lots by number and to the plat "filed in my office" by the mayor.

The first and long-time superintendent of the graveyard was Robert W. McCoy, president of the City Council. Though the superintendent was required by the 1834 ordinance to make an annual report to the council, McCoy apparently did not do so until 1838, when he reported cash on hand from the sale of lots to be $310 and projected expenditures of $50 for repairing the fence and replanting trees. This report also stated that "Nearly all the lots in the Grave yard have been disposed of - some are not yet paid for but the collection will be made shortly."¹¹ In light of all the deeds recorded for lots in later years, it is difficult to explain the statement that nearly all of the lots were disposed of. Nevertheless, based on this report the city council a short time later ordered the purchase of the land which became the city's second graveyard, on the present Livingston Avenue. When the new graveyard was opened it was designated the South Graveyard and the older site became the North Graveyard.

The appointments of sextons were made, along with those of other city officers, each April after the municipal elections had been held. John O. Jones continued as sexton until 1837, when John Copcut was appointed; he served until 1841. Jones was again sexton from 1841 until 1843, when he was succeeded by Titus Richards. In 1844 James McDonald, who had served as sexton of the South Graveyard, was appointed sexton of the North Graveyard; he was reappointed each year from 1844 until the graveyard was closed.¹²

Another graveyard attendant was installed in 1839. The city council minutes of February 11 mention "reports of the graves in the old Grave yard having been frequently opened and the bodies stolen lately." A watchman was to be appointed by council to prevent such occurrences.¹³

Robert McCoy made another report as graveyard superintendent, apparently his first since 1838, on April 3, 1845. According to this report, the graveyard was a money-making proposition for the City in the early years, as it also proved to be at its end in the 1870's.

To the Honorable the City Council of Columbus.

The Superintendent of the North Graveyard reports that he has sold all the lots in said Graveyard, and has collected all the money, except for two lots and he believes that will not be lost; Ground has been paid for out of the proceeds of the sales, with good board fence with Cedar posts put up in front, and a rail fence at the back and trees planted two or three times in the lot, and a road made from the City to the middle gate; he has also paid into the City Treasury one hundred dollars as will appear by the books of 1842 or 1843. he has now on hand one hundred and four dollars & 88 cents. He would remark to the Council that the fences at the north and south sides of the ground are so bad that the Cattle and hogs cannot be kept out, if the Council think best he will send for Cedar posts and have a good board fence made as soon as they can be brought from the lake. Respectfully submitted, R. W. McCoy, Supt.¹⁴

Again, the sale of "all the lots" must be doubted. Allowing for the $400 price of the property and some $100 to $200 for fences and repairs, this report represents some $700 or $800 in income, which would have resulted from the sale of about 150 lots. Sales continued for at least another twelve years.

On motion, the council directed McCoy to have a new fence erected around the graveyard,¹⁵ but it would appear from later documents that the board fence was not extended, except possibly to the south side.

THE BRICKELL ADDITION

The new fence erected around the graveyard in 1845 enclosed on the north side a strip of ground about twenty feet wide which was not owned by the city. It was part of a seven and one half acre tract which had been recently inherited by John and Cyrus Brickell from their father, John Brickell, the first settler in the area which had become the borough of Columbus. John Brickell senior had been buried in this tract after his death in 1844¹⁶ and he or his son John had given permission to others to place the remains of their relatives in the tract before September of 1845. On September 24, 1845, John Brickell (junior) and his wife Mary sold their undivided one-half interest in the seven-plus acre tract to Lincoln Goodale, with the following reservation: "Said Brickell reserves the ground on which some graves have been placed by his permission commencing at the north west corner of the Grave Yard and running east one hundred ninety two feet and extending north with the graves onto where the present grave yard fence now stands."¹⁷

This is the first of several descriptions of the Brickell Addition; the descriptions are not consistent with each other and some are not consistent within themselves. In addition to the problem of inconsistency, John Brickell's brother Cyrus and wife sold their undivided half of the larger tract to Mr. Goodale without making any reservation of the graveyard tract,¹⁸ leading to much confusion in the title to the property. The only clear fact about the early history of the addition is that the fence enclosed the entire twenty-foot strip, from the northwest corner of the old graveyard to High Street.

John Brickell sold several lots in this tract before October 18, 1845, when he had it partially surveyed by surveyor John Graham. The record of the plat states that it "Commences at the North west corner of the old Grave Yard, runs north 20 feet with L. Goodale's land, thence east with said Goodales south line 255 feet to the Columbus and Sandusky road thence south with said road 20 feet, thence west 255 feet to the beginning." Graham commenced the survey at lot number six and laid out a total of twelve, fifteen-foot lots (numbers 6 through 17) from that point eastwardly.¹⁹ Apparently they were laid out to coincide with the arrangement of burials already made there. Lots number one through five were reserved to Brickell himself and were in total length "55 1/2 feet, more or less."

There are several problems with this plat. First of all, the 255 feet described would not reach from the corner of the old graveyard to High street, which was a distance of 486 feet; secondly, the twelve, fifteen-foot lots plus 55 feet, more or less, would total about 235 feet, not 255; third, the reservation in the deed to Goodale mentions a strip only 192 feet in length. Finally, the plat does not make clear just where in the strip the series of lots began or ended. The questions raised by these descriptions are cleared up only by the record of condemnation of the property by the city for the widening of Spruce street in 1889. In that record it becomes apparent that the Brickell reserve was in fact only forty feet long (not 55 feet as platted and not 75 feet as implied by the total length of 255 feet) and that the plat ran eastward a total of 220 feet from the northwest corner of the old graveyard.²⁰ This is the plat shown on the accompanying map.

The North Graveyard, as shown at the time of condemnation by the Columbus, Springfield and Cincinnati Railroad, copied from Franklin County Probate Court Complete Record, Vol. 6 page 187. The locations of tombstones and monuments in the condemned portion were noted exactly by the surveyor.

One hint as to the reason for the discrepancies in the length of the Brickell addition is given in the minutes of the City Council: on December 9, 1844, it was moved that "Mr. McCoy be appointed a committee to move the west fence of the North Graveyard to the line which Dr. L. Goodale claims to be original Line"... The motion was defeated nine to one.²¹ This indicates that the western fence of the graveyard may have been too far west when Mr. Graham made the survey of the Brickell addition, with the result that the western end of the addition was lost when the line was corrected at some later date.

Including the Brickell addition and assuming that the fence extended fifteen feet onto Lincoln Goodale's land on the west, the graveyard fence enclosed a total of 8.87 acres, more or less.

Twelve of the Brickell lots were sold in 1845, before the tract was surveyed, for ten dollars each. Unlike the city's lots in the Doherty tract, which were sold only "for a burying place," the Brickell lots were sold outright. Deeds were written for the lots, some of which were taken to the courthouse by the purchasers to be recorded; the names of the purchasers of the other lots were recorded when the plat was made. The purchasers and the dates on which deeds were written, if recorded, were:

Lot 6 Emanuel & David Doherty

7 Frederick Constans

8 Ebenezer McDaniel, October 21, 1845

9 Nicholas Maurer, October 10, 1845

10 Effa Barth, October 10, 1845

11 Jacob Mourer, October 10, 1845

12 John Huffman

13 Frederick Bennignus, October 10, 1845

14 Eliza Middleton

15 Frederick Bennignus, October 10, 1845

16 Julius Graves, October 10, 1845

17 John Otstot, October 21, 1845

Brickell later sold lot number 1 to William Knoderer and lot number 5 to August Knoderer, both on October 30, 1846.²²

COMPLETION

In the late 1840's the North Graveyard reached what might be called a plateau of maturity or completion. The opening of the South Graveyard in 1841 and the Catholic Cemetery in 1846 took the pressure off of the old graveyard and it was never expanded beyond the Brickell Addition. A new "Ordinance respecting the Grave Yards of the City of Columbus," passed July 30, 1846, made no major changes in its operation, except in requiring the sexton to "keep a list of all interments specifying the age, sex, etc. as may be directed by the Council, and report the same to the Superintendent in April annually." No such reports are now extant.

City Council in 1848 appropriated four lots or ground equal to that in the North Graveyard to A. M. Reader, a Columbus undertaker, "for the purpose of erecting a suitable House to keep dead bodies in" and appointed a committee to select the ground.²³ This building could have measured up to thirty by sixty feet, the size of four lots. The building was erected and was still in use in 1872, as reported in the Ohio State Journal during one of the removals: "The remains thus far taken up have been placed in the dead-house, until such time as it shall be convenient to remove them to ... Green Lawn."²⁴

Later in 1848, on August 14, Council passed another graveyard ordinance, authorizing the superintendent to "lay out some lots off the avenues and other places in said grave-yard, and sell them at what they may be worth, regarding their size and location ... and the sexton of the North Grave-yard shall not bury any person in any lot, without the consent of the owner, nor in any place laid out in lots (unless such lots have been sold) without the consent of the city council..." That Mr. McCoy laid out such lots is apparent from three deeds recorded at the court house, by which lots 525, 529, and 532 were sold in 1849 and 1851 for eight dollars each. The plat of the south one hundred feet of the graveyard made in 1872 shows tombstones in the western roadway, indicating that it, at least, was laid off into lots and at least one of these lots was sold and used for burials.

The report of Superintendent McCoy for the year ending April 15, 1849 showed "that he has sold lots and collected up to the 15th of April 1849" $330.71 and that he had expended $258.88, leaving a balance of $71.13. He also reported that some small accounts amounting to thirty or forty dollars were uncollected. All of the excess, he reported, would be required to repair the fence and put the ground in good order that spring.²⁵ At five dollars per lot, the income and accounts due correspond to some 74 lots sold in the year. In the following spring he reported collecting $119 during the previous twelve months.²⁶ Just prior to the beginning of that period, on April 20, 1849 Council passed a motion allowing the graveyard superintendents to retain for their services ten percent of the money collected for lots sold.²⁷ One would expect that this might encourage the superintendents to sell as many lots as possible. The twelve month period also included some months of unusually high death rates because of a cholera epidemic. Despite these factors, income from the sale of lots had dropped. This was because most of the usable portions of the graveyard had been sold and persons wishing to purchase burial lots were now doing so at the new Green Lawn Cemetery, which opened in the summer of 1849.

On June 22, 1848 a card appeared in the Ohio State Journal calling for the procurement of a one hundred to two hundred acre tract of land near the city as a new burying ground. Of the North Graveyard, the writer said:

The "old burying ground," so called, adjoining the town on the north, is pretty much filled up with the inhabitants of the dead. At least the better parts are fully occupied, leaving a small portion unfit for proper use. Now it is manifest that more room is needed... The city is rapidly increasing, and in a few years it will grow entirely around the present site.

This call for new burial grounds outside of the city parallels similar calls being made elsewhere at the same time; the interment of the dead in crowded towns was coming under increasing attack as an offensive and unhealthy practice. The movement had already succeeded in Boston and was being promoted in Cincinnati as early as 1836. Though all three Columbus graveyards had been outside of the populated area when opened, the city was growing rapidly and soon would surround all three sites. The proposed, new site apparently was conceived as what came to be called a cemetery, as opposed to a graveyard, the former word soon coming to mean an extensive ornamental burial ground, a place pleasant to visit rather than somber, crowded, and often neglected. The fine burial places of the Turks, extending over large tracts adorned by cedars and other trees, are thought to have suggested the plan to European and American reformers.

The result was the formation of the Green Lawn Cemetery Association by several prominent citizens of Columbus in August of 1848. The Association contracted for and laid out the core of the present Cemetery in 1849 and the first burial was made that July. The grounds were "situated less than two miles from the corporation limits of the city, of easy access . . . retired, in its locality, from the busy and bustling scenes of life, and wholly out of reach of the extending growth of our City . . ." ²⁸ The cemetery has since been passed by the growing city, but its permanence has never been doubted and development has generally avoided its immediate vicinity.

If the North Graveyard reached a plateau in its growth or existence in the late 1840's, the 1850's can be described as a period in which its exposure on the plateau opened it to the buffeting of the winds, which at times blew in opposing directions. On one hand, some citizens wanted the grounds maintained as a graveyard and improved, while on the other hand there were those who wanted the grounds closed to interments or completely abandoned as a graveyard.

On May 27, 1852 City Council unanimously moved that the superintendent have constructed a substantial picket or paling fence with cedar or locust posts on the north and west sides of the graveyard. On the following October 1 the motion was revised to provide for a "Tight board fence," which Mr. McCoy reported to be in place, at a cost of $222.57, by November 8. ²⁹ In April of 1853 D. W. Deshler and others petitioned council "for the improvement and beautifying of the North Graveyard." The petition was referred to a committee which reported back a request that $700 be spent on improvements to both graveyards; the report was tabled. ³⁰

Upon the opening of Green Lawn Cemetery, persons owning lots there began to have the remains of their deceased relatives removed from the North Graveyard. City Council passed an amendment to the graveyard ordinance to regulate these removals on August 11, 1851. According to this ordinance, the sextons of the two graveyards were in charge of and were to be paid for removals, though they were not required to convey the remains beyond the limits of the graveyards. They were also required to fill up the empty graves and to keep the surface of the ground smooth and even. For the first time, penalties were provided for any person violating the ordinance, including the sextons, who were liable to a fine and removal from office. Voluntary removals were made very slowly in these years; a report of the Green Lawn Cemetery Association dated January 1, 1858 reported that of 1,079 burials to date, 247 were removals, ³¹ a very low number, considering that the cemetery had been open for over eight years.

Council considered speeding up this process when it resolved³² on May 28, 1853 that the standing committee on graveyards "Report to this Council the expediency of providing for the removal of the Remains in the North Graveyard of this city to Green Lawn Cemetery, and the reclamation of said premises from the purposes of a Burial Ground." Nothing of substance seems to have come of this resolution but the idea was partially revived in 1856.

Robert W. McCoy, president of council, who had served as the only superintendent of the North Graveyard since the post was established in 1834, resigned from council in July of 1853, at the age of sixty-six. He completed the current term as graveyard superintendent, however, and on April 10, 1854 he was re-elected to the position, the only non-member of council ever to serve in such capacity.³³ In 1855 he was replaced by John Noble.

On July 14, 1856 two petitions were presented to the council by councilman/superintendent Noble:

Mr. Noble presented the petitions of Jesse Hibbs & others and Samuel Brush & others for the prevention of interments in the Graveyard situated in the North east part of the City.³⁴

Though not so named in the council records, these petitions referred to the Catholic Cemetery at Washington and Mt. Vernon avenues. The petitioners³⁵ claimed that the decomposition of the dead affected the water and that the grounds were a great objection to the settlement of the neighborhood and the improvement of the adjoining lots. Interestingly, Samuel Brush was the same developer who had sold the site to the Catholic committee for the cemetery in 1846.³⁶ Council added a provision that the closing of the North Graveyard also be considered and referred the petition to a committee.

On July 21, the committee reported back the following proposed ordinance:

Sec. 1. Be it ordained and enacted by the City Council of Columbus, That it shall be unlawful to deposit or bury any dead person in any graveyard within the present corporate limits of said city, or in the enclosure commonly known as the North Graveyard.

Sec. 2. Any person or society of persons violating any provision of this ordinance, shall, on conviction thereof, before the Mayor, be fined the sum of twenty-five dollars and the costs of prosecution.

Sec. 3. This ordinance to be in force from and after the first day of November, 1856.³⁷

Council was so favorable to this ordinance that the rules requiring readings at subsequent meetings were suspended and it was passed immediately; three councilmen voted against the ordinance while all the others, including the only Catholic on Council, Jacob Reinhard, voted in the affirmative.³⁸

The reaction of the citizens in complaining against the ordinance was as swift as the action of council had been in passing it. One letter which appeared in the Ohio State Journal is illustrative of the feelings of the people and also shows that the Council had acted in such haste, without the advice of its attorney, that the ordinance may have been easily overturned in court:

When the old burying ground was laid out into lots, a good many years ago, most of the older citizens purchased burying places there, paid their money, and received conveyances from the city. Ever since that time, many of them have been looking at that spot, and taking pains with it, as for their final resting place along with kindred and friends already sleeping there a little before them.

Now, if those of us who still remain behind are to be prohibited from being buried there, by the present City Council, it certainly would be a very kind thing in that wise body to tell us where we really shall be buried at last, and what we may do with the lots the City Council sold us, and still hold our money for.

The City Solicitor [James A. Wilcox] is absent, and his views are said to be unknown; but that this late so-called ORDINANCE is a mere nullity, and that all persons, rich and poor, high and low, may, if they choose, avoid the inconvenience and expense of other cemeteries, and still go on and bury their dead in peace, without let or hindrance, in their own lots, up in the Old Burying Ground, is the very clear opinion of the

CITY SOLICITOR'S FATHER³⁹

The writer was Yale-educated Phineas B. Wilcox (1790-1863), who "was for more than forty years one of the foremost lawyers, standing in the front rank with the great legal lights of that period in Ohio."⁴⁰ A bill to repeal the ordinance was introduced on August 4 and passed on August 18th.

Subsequent to the defeat of this move for closure, those seeking the retention and improvement of the ground moved forward again. On October 13 the petition of Stanton Sholes, "praying a further protection of the North Graveyard by putting around the same, a stone wall, or iron fence," was presented to council. Superintendent Noble reported in favor of the action, if funds could be found without using tax money.⁴¹ The sale of lots had been continued after passage of the repealing ordinance in 1856, the last deed on record at the Court House bearing the date of October 30, 1857, but the remaining lots were too few for their sale to generate any substantial amount of money. The proposed improvement apparently was never made, though a considerable expense of $301.91 was incurred in the year ending April 5, 1860, according to the city's annual report. No other reference has been found to indicate how the money was spent. Annual reports for the following two years show expenditures of $94.32 and $35.50, probably for fence repairs, but then no expenditures for the next two years, ending in April of 1864.

THE GREENLAWN OFFER

The North Graveyard and surrounding areas were annexed to the city in 1862, increasing expectations for accelerated growth in the area and increasing the general desire to see the graveyard closed or removed.

Removals were expedited by an offer made by the Green Lawn Cemetery Association on February 29, 1864. The Association's trustees proposed to the owners of graveyard lots to exchange Green Lawn lots for the lots owned in the old graveyard, to exhume and decently reinter the remains in the new lots, and when enough lots had been accumulated to lay off the North Graveyard into town lots which would be leased to provide income for the support and improvement of Green Lawn Cemetery.⁴² The lots could not be sold outright, because the lot owners only held them of the city "for a burying place," but the trustees must have thought that the agreements, providing for support of a burial place, would be valid and legal contracts. The agreement whereby the lot owners signed their rights over to Green Lawn read:

We, the undersigned lot-owners in the North Graveyard of the City of Columbus, do hereby give and grant to the Green Lawn Cemetery Association of Columbus, Ohio, all our right, title and interest, legal and equitable, in and to said lots and all rights as such lot-owners; and we further direct and empower the city of Columbus as the holder of the legal title to said graveyard to convey to said Green Lawn Cemetery Association the fee simple of said graveyard, on condition that said Cemetery Association remove the bodies therein, and the monuments erected thereon, to Green Lawn Cemetery, and there inter the same in lots of equal area and erect the monuments thereon, and use the said graveyard for raising a permanent fund for the support and improvement of said Green Lawn Cemetery in such manner as is best, under the direction of the Trustees of said Cemetery Association, never, however, to be alienated in fee.⁴³

One of the first lots offered to Green Lawn was the one reserved by William and Eliza Doherty when they sold their tract to the city in 1830. This lot was, of course, owned in fee simple and was conveyed to Greenlawn Cemetery by a deed dated March, 1864 and signed by Eliza Doherty, widow, William S. and Sarah Miner, James M. and Maria Doherty, Francis T. and Anna Doherty, Leonard and Mary E. Whitney, Edward A. and Jane Fitch, John W. and Cornelia Doherty, and McLane Doherty. The deed contained the same provisions as the above mentioned contract as to removal of remains and monuments and the prohibition against alienation in fee.⁴⁴ One account states that "about seventy-five out of one hundred and fifty lot-holders agreed to this exchange," but one is at a loss as to how to interpret this since there must have been many more than 150 owners of the 629 lots in the Doherty tract, even discounting for the unusable and the free portions of the graveyard.

The Green Lawn offer solved the problem which had made unworkable the city's 1856 attempt to prohibit further burials in the North Graveyard. The offer of an equivalent lot at Green Lawn made available to any lot owner the same space which he had purchased from the city, the use of which which would be denied to him by a prohibitory ordinance. Council therefore on May 30, 1864 passed unanimously a new ordinance prohibiting further burials in the North Graveyard.

The city still had the responsibility of maintaining the site both as a graveyard for the remains not removed and to keep up the appearance of the developing area. The editor of the Ohio State Journal remarked on November 16, 1864 that

We passed the North Grave-yard yesterday afternoon, and were astonished at the manner in which it is exposed to the depredations of cows, hogs, and all manner of four-footed who root up and otherwise trespass upon the sacred soil that contains the remains of many noble men, who have long since passed from the stage of action; but whose memory will live, as long as the old citizens of Columbus have any influence with the Council. We hope that our city fathers will save us the necessity of referring to it again.

The "city fathers" spent small sums over the next few years to repair the fence around the graveyard and in 1868 spent a considerable sum to fill up the swamp or pond in the northeast corner of the grounds. The extent of this problem, which had existed from the start, is finally exposed in the city's documents and the newspaper's remarks when it was cleaned up. The city's annual report for the year ending in the spring of 1869 shows expenditures of $4.50 paid to "L. Black, chopping timber, North Graveyard" and $230.12 paid to "Murphy & McCabe, 1,841 loads of Dirt" and $29.00 paid to "J. Boswell, 14 1/2 days' labor superintending filling up." The Ohio State Journal of June 2 and 3 remarked:

The trees in the pond in the North Grave Yard have been cut down, and that nuisance is now being abated by carting in loads of dirt and gravel.

A team of horses, attached to one of the wagons engaged in filling up the swamp in the North Grave Yard, got into a fix yesterday by plunging off into the swampy mire of that locality. After considerable trouble and plunging, they again reached terra firma.

Additional filling to the amount of 334 loads of dirt was done by Patrick Kelly for a price of $40.08 in the year ending in the spring of 1871.

REMOVALS OF 1872

Though not remarked as such, the beginning of the end of the North Graveyard was signalled by the formation of the Union Depot Company in the spring of 1868. The tract of land across High street from the North Graveyard had been chosen as the site of the first railroad station in Columbus by the directors of the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati and Columbus and Xenia railroads in 1848. The frame stationhouse, accomodating three tracks, was erected in 1850. In April and May of 1868 the Union Depot Company was formed by the successors of these two railroads with the intention of erecting a depot for the use of "all lines of railroad now or hereafter constructed, terminating at or passing through the city of Columbus." This site thus became the target of all new rail lines entering the city, which were beginning to proliferate in the late 1860's.

In order to gain access to this new depot, the Columbus, Springfield and Cincinnati Railroad filed suit in the Franklin County Probate Court on January 19, 1871 to appropriate the southern one hundred feet of the North Graveyard. The suit was filed against the city, as owner in fee of the property, and was quickly decided, with the result that the railroad placed $14,625 in the hands of the court for the property on January 26. Previous to the filing of this case, the Columbus, Chicago and Indiana Central Railway Company, assuming that the lot-owners had some legal right in fee to their lots, had been negotiating with them individually with the ultimate goal of acquiring the entire Doherty tract for the same purpose of access to the Union Depot.⁴⁵ This company also filed suit in the Probate Court in January, 1871, to appropriate the entire graveyard. This suit was later abandoned when the land was tied up by the suit in Common Pleas Court, as described below.

As a result of the actions of the railroad companies, two suits were filed in the Franklin County Common Pleas Court. First, John M. Kerr, son of the grantor of the Kerr tract, filed a suit of ejectment against the City of Columbus, on the grounds that the city had abandoned it as a burying ground. The second and by far more interesting suit was filed on March 6, 1871 against the city, both railroads, and the heirs of William Doherty by Elias Gaver, Chester Johnson, and Horton Howard "for themselves and numerous others in like situation" who were lot owners in the Doherty tract.

The petition, answers, and cross-petitions in the Gaver suit contain much interesting history of the graveyard, as seen from the viewpoint of the various parties (pertinent statements from which have been used in writing this history). The CS&C Railroad statements of course were designed to throw the graveyard in the worst possible light in order to defend their right to the appropriated property and to prevent being forced to pay further money to satisfy the lot owners. The railroad claimed that the lot owners' "right of easement" had ended when the ordinance of 1864 had prohibited further burials and that "the premises have for a long time been suffered to go to waste, and destruction, and for years have been totally unfit, insecure, and unsuitable for a place of repose for the dead, and subject to depredation, nuisance, and destruction from their exposed position in the midst of an active and growing part of the City." The city's answer was directed toward ensuring that its ownership in fee of the land was recognized and that the lot owners' claims would not substantially reduce its net realization from the railroad's appropriation.

When the case was first heard in February of 1872, the court appointed John Graham as Master Commissioner to report on the ownership and occupancy of all of the lots in the Doherty tract. In April he filed his report, of which no copies seem to exist now, and was ordered to obtain lots in Greenlawn Cemetery of like size to those still occupied in the one hundred foot strip and to have the remains moved there.⁴⁶

The work of removing the remains from the three tiers of lots appropriated by the railroad was taken up on April 15, 1872 under the direction of Mr. Breyfogle.⁴⁷ The Ohio State Journal remarked, "From what we know of those having charge of the work we have no doubt it will be done in a humane and Christian manner, but it might be well for those having friends or relatives buried within the limits named who have any special directions to give as to re-interments or pointing out graves of friends to attend." The remains were placed in boxes, on which were marked the numbers of the lots, the names of the owners of the lots, and where there were tombstones to indicate the names of the persons buried. The old sexton, James McDonald, also helped in the work:

In many instances there is nothing to indicate the resting place of the sleepers, save a slight depression in the surface, and these are not always found to be correct signs of the sexton's work. Mr. McDonald, the old sexton, who commenced his labors in 1844, is an invaluable aid in pointing out the precise location of graves since the date at which he began to "shovel them in," besides giving correct information as to many who were previously buried, even where no monument marks the grave.

On another day the paper remarked,

It is curious to note with what a difference of feeling this work is being viewed by visitors. To some it possesses only a curious attraction, such as one might feel in discovering relics of a by-gone age, while to others more sensitively inclined, it seems to recall the mortality of our poor humanity with a forceful idea, and the mind is busy with thoughts of its own future, as connected with the body in which it dwells. Men who are among the gayest of the gay and most careless a hundred yards from this lonely city of the dead, walk with a softened tread and draw the breath softly when looking upon all that remains of forms that once stood erect, and were as full of life and vigor as their own. The full force of the text is here realized, that as "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

A total of 329 graves were removed from the one hundred foot strip of ground, at a cost of $2,751.50⁴⁸ leaving for the city nearly $12,000 of the money paid by the railroad. The railroad had men working in the cleared ground by early June and soon was erecting a temporary depot, to serve until the new Union Depot would be completed.

Remarks by the extant newspapers of the era concerning individuals removed are included in the Consolidated list. Green Lawn Cemetery has no records of these removals which were completed under the authority of the court and not by their own employees; their lot books contain only some of the names of those former North Graveyard lot owners in whose names the new lots were purchased. Such lots which have been located have been checked for tombstones and any inscriptions found have also been included in the consolidated list.

THE DOHERTY TRACT CLEARED

Elias Gaver and his fellow-plaintiffs against the City of Columbus filed a supplemental petition on June 11, 1872, in which they admitted that the North Graveyard was by that time unfit for use as a burial ground and asked that the entire Doherty tract be cleared, subdivided, and sold within three years to pay for the removals. All of the parties in the suit agreed to this and in January, 1873 John Graham was ordered to proceed with the removals and O. P. Hines was appointed Master Commissioner to subdivide the land into building lots after the removals were completed.⁴⁹ By this time the subject was losing its immediate interest to the citizens and the newspapers did not cover this more extensive removal with the same complete coverage that they had given to the earlier one. Two paragraphs in the Daily Dispatch of May 17 and June 5 indicate that the removals were taking place on those dates:

History of the North Graveyard

In the transfer of dead from the North Graveyard to Green Lawn, one gentleman was much chagrined to find that after a careful and reverential removal and reinterment in appropriate style, what he supposed to be the remains of his grandfather, some time ago, turns out to have been the body of a colored man. The remains of the grandfather have been found, and will be removed. (May 17)

Remains are being exhumed in the North Grave Yard from the "cholera row" of 1849. In many cases several bodies were buried in one grave, some without coffins. With the exception of Kerr's addition, the work will be completed in about a week. (June 5)

No report was made in the papers of the numbers of removals from this portion of the Doherty tract. Those moved from the common lots, not privately held, were moved to lots at Green Lawn which were purchased and are still held in the name of "John Graham, Master Commissioner." Very few tombstones remain on these lots.*

While these removals were in progress, the city filed a cross-petition in the case, including as defendants John M. Kerr (owner of the Kerr tract reversion rights), the Green Lawn Cemetery Association (for the rights granted by lot owners under its proposal of 1864), James Doherty and the other Doherty heirs, the executors of Lincoln Goodale, and the lot owners in the Brickell Addition, in an attempt to convince the court to order that the removal extend to the other tracts in the graveyard. The court refused such an extension in this case, but docketed two new cases, one for the Kerr tract and one for the Brickell Addition and adjacent strip of land.⁵⁰

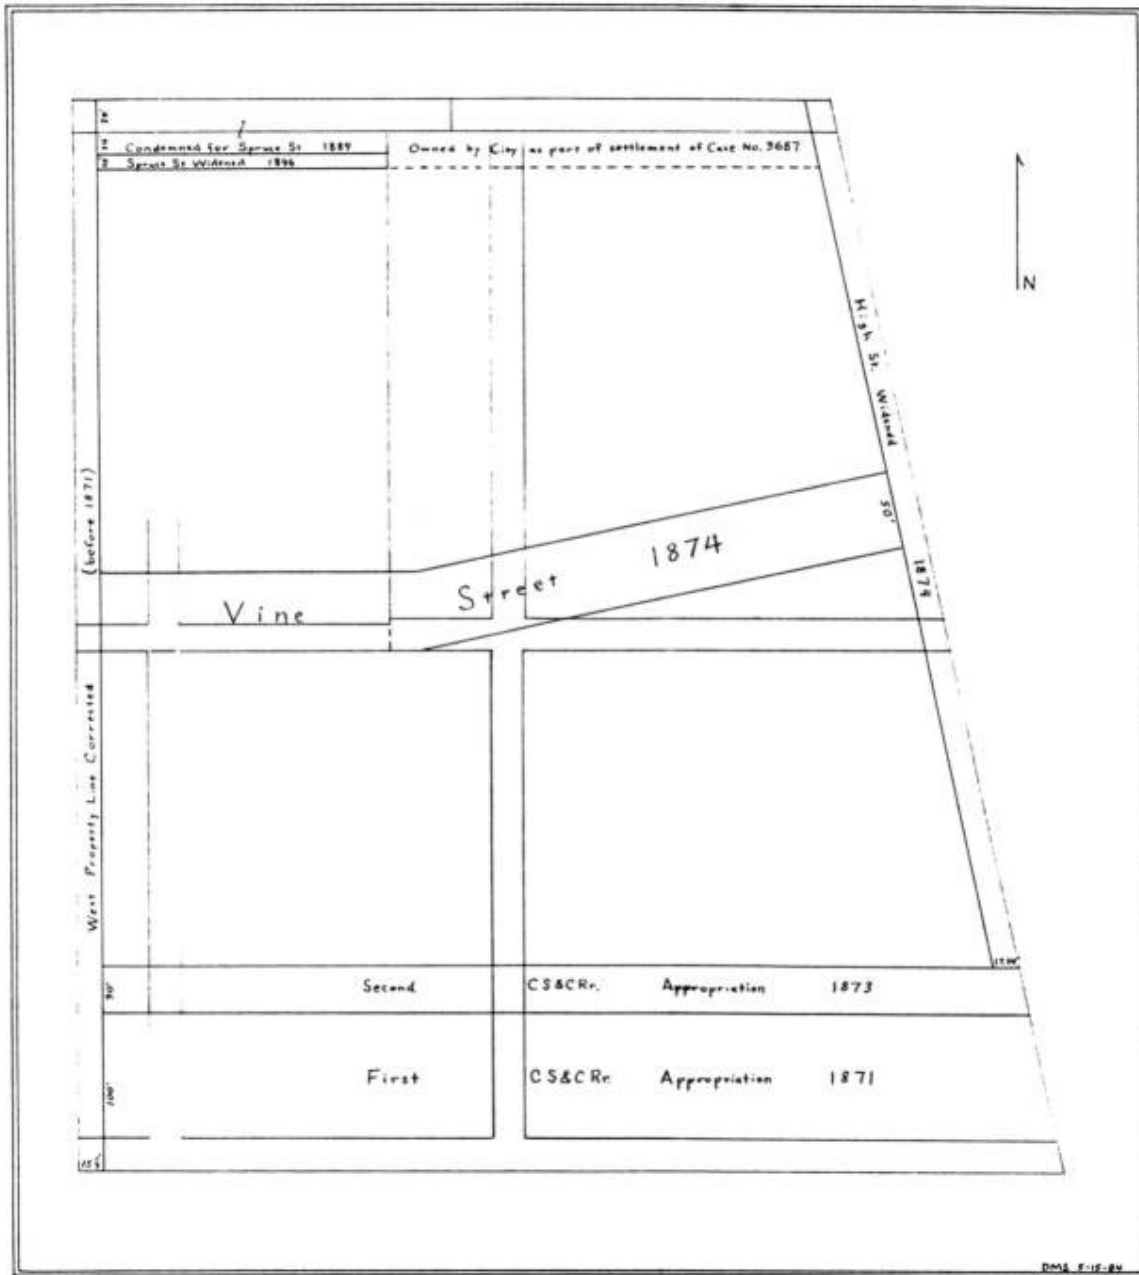

In the ultimate division of the Doherty tract, the city gained 17.34 feet to widen High street, the CS&C Railroad appropriated another thirty-foot strip on the south, the city took many of the building lots as their share of the proceeds, and the remainder of the lots were sold at auction.⁵¹ Besides the ownership of the lots it chose to keep, the city netted over $71,000 from the railroad appropriations and from the sales of building lots by the Master Commissioner over the next several years.⁵²

THE KERR TRACT CLEARED

The ownership of the Kerr tract was complicated by several transactions which had been made over the years. On the death of proprietor John Kerr, his reversionary interest in the land had become that of his widow and his two children, John M. Kerr and Mrs. Mary Heffner. The widow and daughter had sold their interest to the son, John M. Kerr.⁵³ He in turn had made some agreement, the details of which are now lost, with William P. Brown and James F. Brown, whereby they also claimed an interest in the tract.⁵⁴ In addition, at some time the proprietors had sold any interest they retained in property which had belonged to the proprietors' association to Lyne Starling and Gustavus Swan, whose executors were also pulled into this case over the Kerr tract. According to Lee's history, the city's attorneys denied that the borough of Columbus had taken possession of the Kerr tract under the deed of 1821, and claimed that in June, 1816, prior to the Kerr ownership, James Johnston, then owner, had deeded the land to the borough for a graveyard. . . . Pending determination of this suit. . . . John M. Kerr, proposed to the City Council to relinquish his claims to the ground provided the city would pay him $600 cash, and an annuity of the same amount during his natural life. After this proposition had been before the council for some time Mr. Kerr gave notice of its withdrawal, but the council insisted that it could not be withdrawn, and on August 25, 1873, unanimously adopted it. Mr. Kerr persisted in refusing acceptance, and finally sold his reversionary interest for $3,000.⁵⁵ [to James M. Westwater, on Feb. 10, 1874].⁵⁶

Westwater's ownership of the land was confirmed by the Common Pleas Court and then in the District Court, where a mandate was issued on April 12, 1881. According to the mandate, the City of Columbus held the land in trust and must turn it over to Westwater since the trust was ended, but he was not entitled to receive the land "until the remains of the dead interred in said grounds are suitably removed therefrom and decently reinterred" with their monuments and tombstones. John Graham was again appointed Master Commissioner to select and purchase in the name of the city a suitable place of reinterment and to see to the removals.⁵⁷

The work of clearing the Kerr tract was begun in November and completed on December 2, 1881. The greater portion of the graves in the tract had been removed by families and friends and those removed in 1881 were nearly all unknown. In all, 867 were removed at this time, of which over half were children. "The fragments exhumed of this great number of bodies filled but sixty-six boxes, none of which were of as great capacity as an ordinary coffin. In fact, the boxes used were generally ordinary shoe-boxes, in each of which was placed an average of thirteen or fourteen bodies." Eight or nine of the bodies were identified. One man had been buried with the belt of the Fame fire company, which had been active in the 1850's. The unearthing of this belt caused quite a stir as the newspapers tried to determine his identity. At first he was thought to have been James Collins, a brakeman on the Cleveland railroad who was killed on the job in 1854; others thought him to be Henry Foster, who had been killed in 1855 in the Know-Nothing riot. He finally was positively identified by Mrs. C. H. Shumleffel as her brother Andrew J. King, who had been buried on November 20, 1854.⁵⁸ The boxes were re-interred on Lot 52 of Section 28 in Green Lawn Cemetery.

LATER REMOVALS

After 1881, the only remaining part of the North Graveyard was the Brickell Addition, which the city did not pursue in Common Pleas Court. Most of the graves were removed privately, but a few remained there when the city condemned the land in 1889 for the widening of Spruce street. The majority of the lot owners or their heirs were awarded $200 for each lot, though the Graves heirs received $300 and John Otstott received $400 because their lots were closer to High street and adjacent to the lots which had already been developed on the Doherty tract.⁵⁹ Boxes from the Benignus, Nicholas Maurer, and Eliza Middleton Fracker lots were re-interred on the city's Lot 27 in Section 28 at Green Lawn.⁶⁰

Though a thorough and conscientious job was made of the removals, it was impossible to find every grave in the old graveyard. In May of 1885 City Council⁶¹ adopted a resolution "instructing the City Civil Engineer to inquire into the truth of rumors that bodies which were buried in the old North graveyard are now being found by parties making excavations on the premises, and if found to be correct that he cause the remains so found to be interred in Greenlawn Cemetery." More remains were located in 1913 when five additional boxes were buried on lot 27 with the removals from the Brickell Addition.

Arrangement of the North Graveyard

No plat of either the North or the East Graveyard has been preserved by the city government of Columbus; however, much information concerning the North Graveyard has been preserved in court records and other sources. A special effort has therefore been made to construct a plat which represents as closely as possible the original arrangement of this tract. The logic used in reconstructing the accompanying plat and the sources of the data are presented in this section.

OVERALL DIMENSIONS

The Doherty and Kerr tracts together comprised lots 126 through 129 of the proprietors' additional plat of the city, measuring 486 feet on the north, 660 feet on the west, and 624 feet on the south. (Answer of Goodale's executors, Gaver v. City of Columbus, June 30, 1873, in Common Pleas Complete Record 57/17.)

A copy of the survey made in 1871, for purposes of condemnation by the Columbus, Springfield and Cincinnati Railroad of the south 100 foot strip of the property, shows it to have a length of 587 feet on the south. This is 37 feet shorter than the length indicated by the above description, and is not likely to be correct. The error apparently was made in copying the plat into the record book. The surveyor's line from which the locations of the tombstones in the strip were measured was not the southern property line but was the northern line of the strip being condemned, which because of the angle of High street would be shorter than the southern property line. At this point the depth of the original lot 129 would be

which is only sixteen feet longer than the 587 feet measured in the survey. (Probate Court Complete Record 6/185ff.)

As mentioned in the historical section under the heading of the Brickell Addition, John Graham's 1845 survey of that addition commenced at Brickell's lot number six, which was "55 1/2 feet, more or less" from the northwest corner of the Kerr tract. The 1889 condemnation of this property shows lot number six to be forty feet from the corner of the graveyard, some 15 1/2 feet closer than in the 1845 survey. (Deed Record 31/392 and Probate Court Complete Record 21/371-380.)

Thus, if the 587 foot line of the 1871 survey is taken to be the survey line on the north side of the 100 foot strip, measurements of both the southern and northern extremities of the graveyard indicate that a strip of about sixteen feet on the western side of the property was lost, undoubtedly to Lincoln Goodale's claim mentioned in the City Council minutes. Some time between 1845 and 1871 all of the graves in this strip must have been moved further into the graveyard or elsewhere.

ROADWAYS

The 1871 plat for the condemnation case shows the internal roadways of the Doherty tract. The presence of a roadway along the southern property line had also been deduced from a statement in the Ohio Statesman of Feb. 4, 1871: "The Springfield Company went to work, and are now grading in a portion of the Graveyard which was formerly used as a roadway, and where there are no graves."

North Graveyard Arrangement

The arrangement of tracts and lots in the North Graveyard. The arrangement of lots and roadways was deduced as described in the text. The lines at the left indicate the property line as claimed by Lincoln Goodale and apparently finally agreed to by the city.

North Graveyard Arrangement

The location of the central roadway, running east and west, may be indicated by a sixteen-foot wide portion of Vine street, which appears on the southern edge of the Kerr tract in the existing plat of the City's North Graveyard Addition at the court house. The original plat was lost in the 1879 court house fire and the present one was reconstructed from other court records. It represents as best as possible the situation when the original plat was made, which was before litigation over the Kerr tract was complete. The plat shows Vine street at full width from High street to the Kerr tract. The south line of Vine meets the south line of the Kerr tract and the street is shown continuing through the tract to Park street, but only sixteen feet wide. The city may have claimed that much of the Kerr tract as existing roadway even before the litigation was complete. (No complete record of the litigation over this tract appears to have been made by the Common Pleas Court.)

It is probably a safe assumption that the twenty-foot strip of land east of the Brickell Addition, which was not owned by the City but was enclosed within the fence, was used as a roadway from a northern gate to the north/south roadway. The existence of a northern gate can be deduced from the superintendent's report in 1845 that he had made a road (High street) from the City to the "middle gate."

LOTS

The Kerr tract, measuring 198 by 330 feet, was common ground and never was laid off into lots.

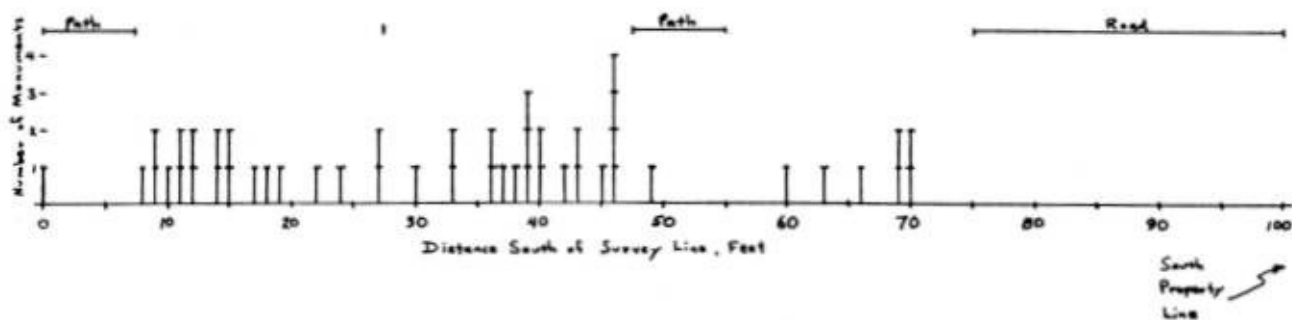

The only explicit statement found concerning the size of the lots in the Doherty tract is contained in the petition of Elias Gaver et alia in Common Pleas Complete Record 57/1. This petition states that the Doherty tract was laid out into fifteen by thirty foot lots, "with suitable streets and foot paths." Martin's history (p. 390) adds the information that the lots were "pretty uniform in size and shape."

The size of the lots as stated in the Gaver petition is almost certainly incorrect. The petition also states that the Doherty tract was laid out into 629 lots, some designated by number and some by letter. If this number of lots is correct, and if the lots were all of about 450 square feet, then sooner or later all of this tract must have been laid out into lots, including virtually all of the roadways and footpaths, leaving no means of traversing the graveyard without crossing grave-spaces. This possibility is eliminated by the City's claim in its answer to the Gaver petition that the value of the roads and walkways was over half of the value of the tract; though possibly not accurate, such a statement would have been entirely impossible if the tract contained 629 lots of 450 square feet.

The replacement lots which were provided in sections M and Q at Greenlawn Cemetery were supposed to have been of area equal to the area of the lots in the North Graveyard. Every one of these lots at Greenlawn measures fifteen by twenty feet, or very close to this. On this basis it must be acknowledged that this was probably the true size of the North Graveyard lots.

This conclusion is also supported by an analysis of the locations of grave markers which were surveyed for condemnation of the 100 foot strip in 1871. (Probate Court Complete Record 6/187.) A graph of the north/south locations of these stones (see below) fits very well with a pattern from south to north of (1) a 25-foot roadway; (2) a 20-foot lot; (3) a 7 1/2-foot path; (4) two, 20-foot lots; (5) another 7 1/2-foot path. This pattern fits the "three tiers of lots" criterion for the south 100 feet as established by the newspaper article when the condemnation case was begun.

North Graveyard Arrangement

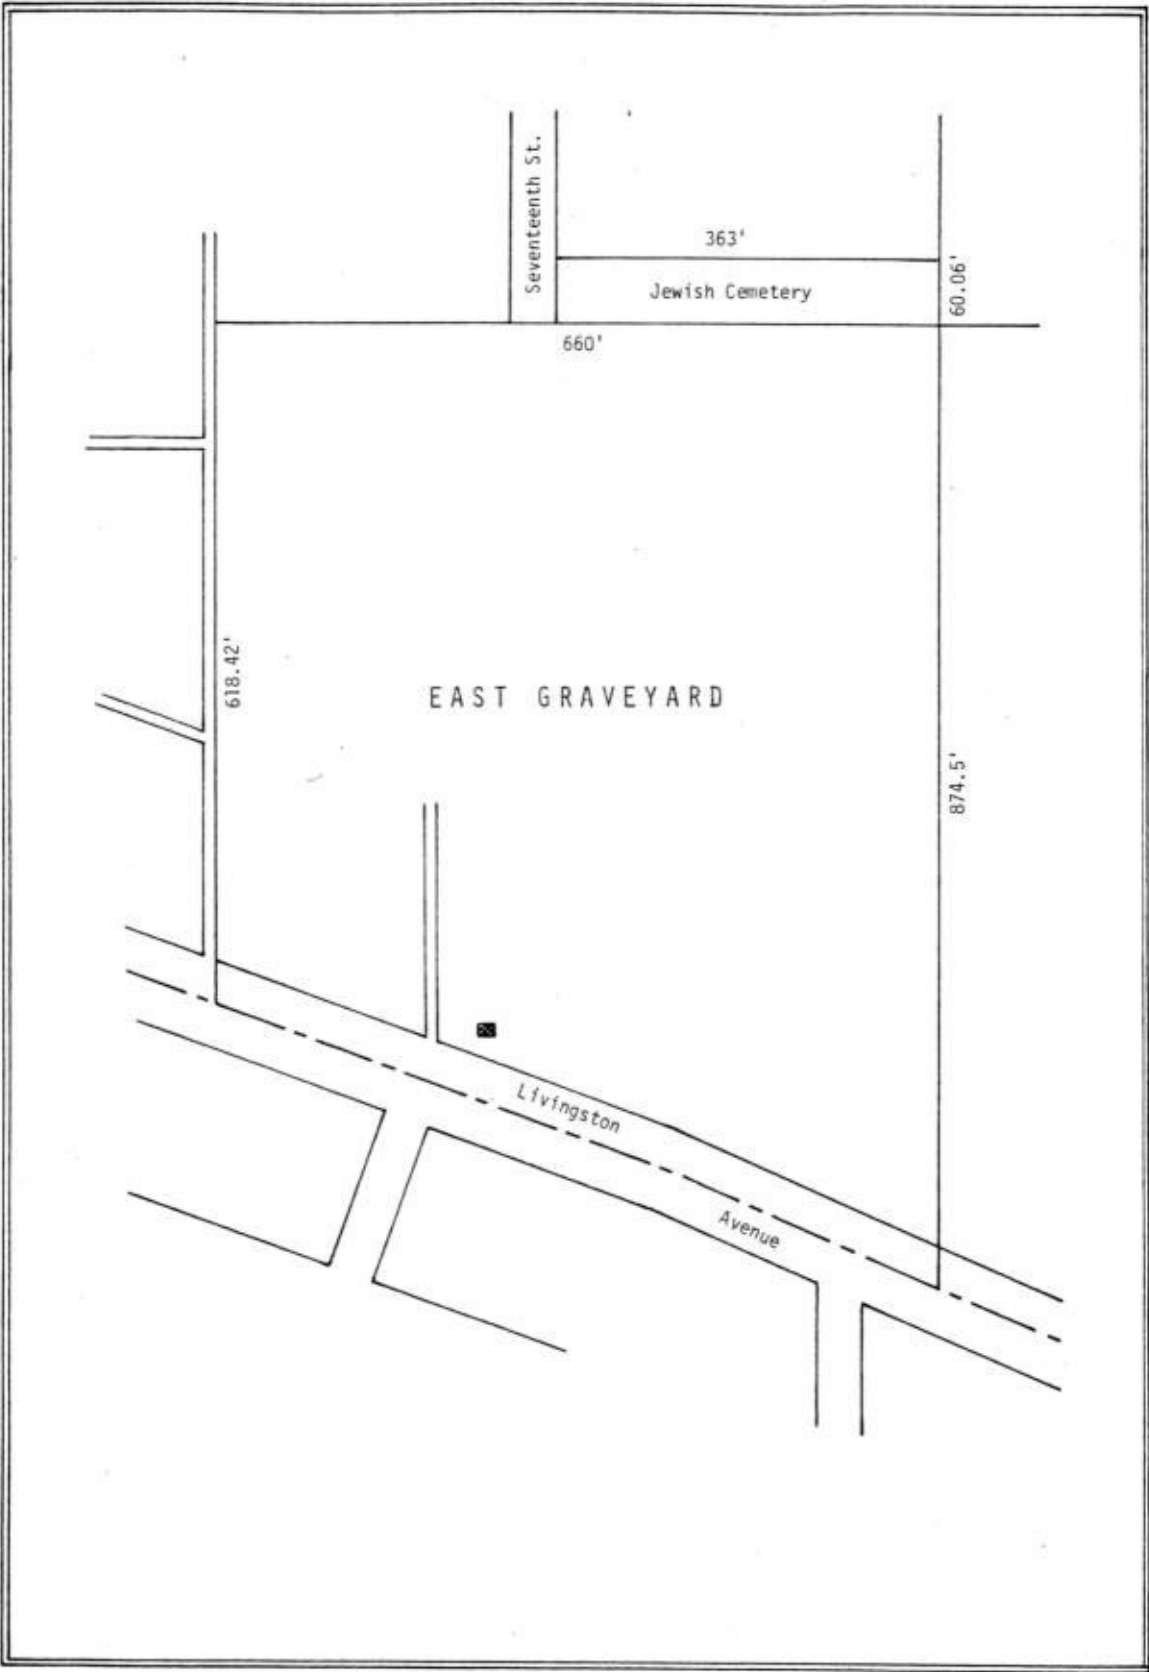

A repetition of a series of two, twenty-foot lots separated by 7 1/2-foot paths ends at the southern edge of the Kerr tract, an exact fit which would have been sought when the lots were laid out. Likewise, repetition of the entire pattern brings the survey exactly to the northern end of the property.

A similar analysis of the east/west locations of the grave markers helps to establish, though not as conclusively, the pattern of lot locations from east to west, with roadways and paths as shown on the diagram. These locations are also supported by the fact that the lots at the north end and adjacent to the Kerr tract would exactly align with the boundaries of lots 15, 16, and 17 of the Brickell Addition.

The only firm clue to lot numbers is given in the Daily Dispatch of April 26, 1872, which implies that lots 139 and 171 were in the southern one hundred foot strip. The papers also name in this strip the Cool lot and the Cooper lot, which from deed records may have been numbers 180 and 166, respectively. Lots 525, 529, and 532 [assumed to be the correct reading of what is recorded at the courthouse as 352], which were sold in 1849 and 1851 for eight dollars each, must have been laid out in roadways after August, 1848. Since these numbers represent the last lots laid out, and since no letter-designated lots are named in any deeds, it seems likely that the lots set aside for single graves numbered roughly one hundred and were designated by letters.

If the lots in the triangular-shaped areas on the High street side of the Graveyard were the single-grave lots; and if three roadway lots are included in each of the north-south roadways in the south 100-foot strip; and if the single-grave portion of this strip were counted as just one lot; and not counting the western tier of lots which was lost to Lincoln Goodale's claim, then the plan would have exactly 100 lots in the strip, as mentioned by the newspaper at the time of the condemnation.

The East and South Graveyards

"It has greatly retarded the growth of the city in that direction. The best use that could be made of it would be to convert it into a public park, in connection with the beautiful grove in the rear of it -- the only grove of native forest trees remaining in the eastern portion of the city." So wrote Jacob Studer in his 1873 Columbus, Ohio: Its History, Resources and Progress concerning the East Graveyard.¹ His call was answered only a few years later. Today's Livingston Park at Livingston avenue and Eighteenth street, though the grove of native trees was never added to it, is a pleasant island of green and playground next to Children's Hospital, long since surrounded by the city.

The East Graveyard, originally called the South Graveyard, came into being as a result of a meeting of Columbus City Council held on April 16, 1838. At that time Robert W. McCoy, president of council and superintendent of the city's only graveyard on North High street, reported, "Nearly all the lots in the Grave yard have been disposed of -- some are not yet paid for but the collection will be made shortly." Council immediately appointed a committee to search for more ground which could be purchased to enlarge the graveyard.² After a wait of nine months, this committee reported not on enlarging the existing graveyard but that eleven acres in Montgomery Township "on the north side of the Livingston road East of the City might be obtained of Mr. Greenwood."³ The land was examined and found suitable and on February 11, 1839 its purchase was ordered; at the same time a committee was formed to have the land cleared and laid off into small family grave lots.⁴

The purchase was completed on February 13, 1839. Though the council committee had indicated that the land would be purchased from councilman Greenwood, it was in fact purchased from Matthew King and his wife Phoebe, who had purchased it from E. W. Gwynn just two weeks earlier.⁵ As payment, the Kings accepted twenty-five dollars in cash and eleven hundred dollard in notes drawn on the city treasury. The lot contained eleven and one quarter acres, but that figure included all of the land out to the middle of the Livingston road. Today's park, with losses to adjacent streets, contains nine and one half acres.

A portion of the land was laid out in lots and sold by the city to citizens for the use of their families. About one third of it was never laid off because it was too low, swampy, and wet. Even the portions which were used were wet; as late as 1882 when removals were being made, workmen found all of the first graves opened to be full of ground water.⁶ The other part of the land was used as a public burying place, principally by Germans in the early years.⁷ The public portion of the ground was in the rear and included the north-eastern corner, where the first burials were made.

The South Graveyard, like the North, was operated under a superintendent (a member of council) and a sexton, who were appointed by council each spring, with duties as described for these positions in the North Graveyard history. The sextons who served at the South Graveyard through 1860 were James McDonald, Titus Richards, Conrad Pfeifer, John Fronenburgh, and Frederick Roll.⁸

As with the North Graveyard, the purchaser of a lot in the South Graveyard was given a receipt by the superintendent, which was taken to the mayor who wrote a deed for the lot. Ten such deeds were recorded at the court house, the earliest bearing the date of October 28, 1841 and the latest April 3, 1860. Two additional names of lot owners were recorded in Cornelius Jacobs' report as superintendent 'in the spring of 1846.'⁹ All of these appear in the consolidated list. Sales were slow and seem to have gradually dwindled to practically none by 1860. The surviving superintendents' reports show the following numbers of lots sold: April of 1845, 16 lots in the previous twelve months; 1846, two; 1847, seven; 1851, nine, including one fractional lot; 1858, one lot sold.¹⁰ By this time, of course, most purchases of new lots were being made at Greenlawn Cemetery.

In March of 1849, about the same time that the dead house was being built at the North Graveyard, council gave permission to George Krell, a carpenter, to erect a dead house in the South Graveyard, under the direction of the superintendent.¹¹ The 1872 Franklin County atlas shows a building, undoubtedly this "dead house," in the graveyard just east of the entrance on Livingston avenue; the entrance was opposite the present Seventeenth street. Also in 1849, a communication was received from the County Commissioners, asking permission to bury the dead from the county's poor house in the South Graveyard. The petition was referred to the superintendent, with instructions to grant the privilege.¹² The public portion of the ground also apparently was used during a thirteen month period of the Civil War, when from May of 1862 through May of 1863 twenty-two Confederate prisoners who died at Camp Chase, west of Columbus, were buried there. Their names and other data, preserved in the Franklin County Recorder's card file of veterans' graves, are included in the consolidated list.

Late in 1851 the small Jewish community of Columbus purchased a sixty by 363 foot strip of land adjoining the South Graveyard on the north. This was used as the Jewish Cemetery for almost thirty years, after which time the graves were moved to the newer cemetery adjacent to Mt. Calvary Cemetery in Franklin Township.¹³ Though adjacent, this cemetery was never part of the South Graveyard.

The name of the South Graveyard was changed to the East Graveyard in the early or mid-1860's. The annual reports of the City of Columbus show no expenditures for maintenance or repairs of the East Graveyard during the years 1859 through 1867. Funds from the sale of lots apparently carried through these years. Beginning in 1868, expenditures for lumber and hardware for fence and gate repairs are recorded, along with the purchase of a new scythe, and for the labor of Frederick Doell, who appears as the graveyard's sexton in city directories from 1875 through 1884. Despite these obvious efforts, Studer in 1873 claimed that the site was "in a miserably-dilapidated condition; the fences once enclosing it are decayed or broken down, and the general wretched appearance of the tract is a disgrace to the city." By that time the only burials being made were those of the very poor, the friendless, and public paupers in the public portion of the ground.¹⁴

The first move to close the East Graveyard appears to have been made by the citizens of that vicinity, when in April of 1868 the petition of "S. Gouebler" and 216 others was presented to council, "asking the Council to purchase ground for a new Grave Yard and to abandon the one known as the East Grave Yard."¹⁵ Council apparently took no action at that time; it seems to have been again struggling with the problem of reimbursement for the lot owners, as it had struggled with the same problem at the North Graveyard until the offer to exchange lots was made by the Green Lawn Cemetery Association.

THE FRANKLIN COUNTY GRAVEYARD

The petition to close the graveyard and Studer's call to convert it to a park were taken up by George J. Rodenfels, an East Main street grocer who was elected to City Council in 1875. The minutes of City Council provide little or no help in determining the succession of events, but the minutes of the Franklin County Board of Commissioners provide insight into the workings of the council. The commissioners' minutes of November 20, 1875 state that

This day the committee appointed by the City Council of Columbus for the purpose of conferring with the board to take such measures as may be necessary to remove the pest house outside the City Limits appeared before the Board . . . it was agreed [that the board would] meet on Wednesday November 24 [for the purpose of] examining several locations and parcels of land supposed to be suitable for burials and for erection of a Pest House for the use of the County and City jointly.¹⁶

The subject develops and the intentions of the City Council are further exposed in the commissioners' minutes of December 6, 1875.

Whereas the Board is informed that the Council of the City of Columbus have expressed their desire and intention of abandoning the Graveyard lying in the eastern part of said city for the further use of burying purposes and to prohibit by ordinance any further interment in said grounds, and whereas the said council have requested this board to adopt such measures as may be necessary for the removal of the Pest house outside of the city limits said Pest house being detrimental to the health and prosperity of that part of the city in which it is located.

In order to provide a burying ground for the use of the County and City the board is of the opinion that it is expedient and necessary to purchase land for use of burial and other purposes.¹⁷

The commissioners advertised for bids on five to twenty acres of land within four miles of the city limits and, after examining the twenty bids received, selected a site on the east side of South High street, described in a newspaper at the time as "near the Starch Factory on Chillicothe Pike."¹⁸ The site today runs east from High Street, roughly between State Route 104 and Kingston avenue; it measured about 1430 feet east and west by 907 feet north and south and contained thirty acres. The property was purchased from Jackson and Mary Hoddy and Dixon Fullerton on April 8, 1876 for $8000.¹⁹ The commissioners' minutes of April 11 note the first payment on the land and call it the "South Graveyard."²⁰

THE EAST GRAVEYARD CLOSED

City Council, having gotten the county to help solve the problem of replacement land for those owning lots in the East Graveyard, acted promptly to close the old burial ground. Councilman Rodenfels introduced an ordinance to prohibit further burials there on April 10, 1876.²¹ The ordinance, which included punishment by fines or jail for transgressors, was passed on May 15. A month later, on June 12, the county commissioners by resolution granted to the City of Columbus "the use for Burial and Sanitary Purposes, so much of the Land purchased of Hoddy and Fullerton, as have heretofore been assigned by this Board for burial purposes in said grounds."²²

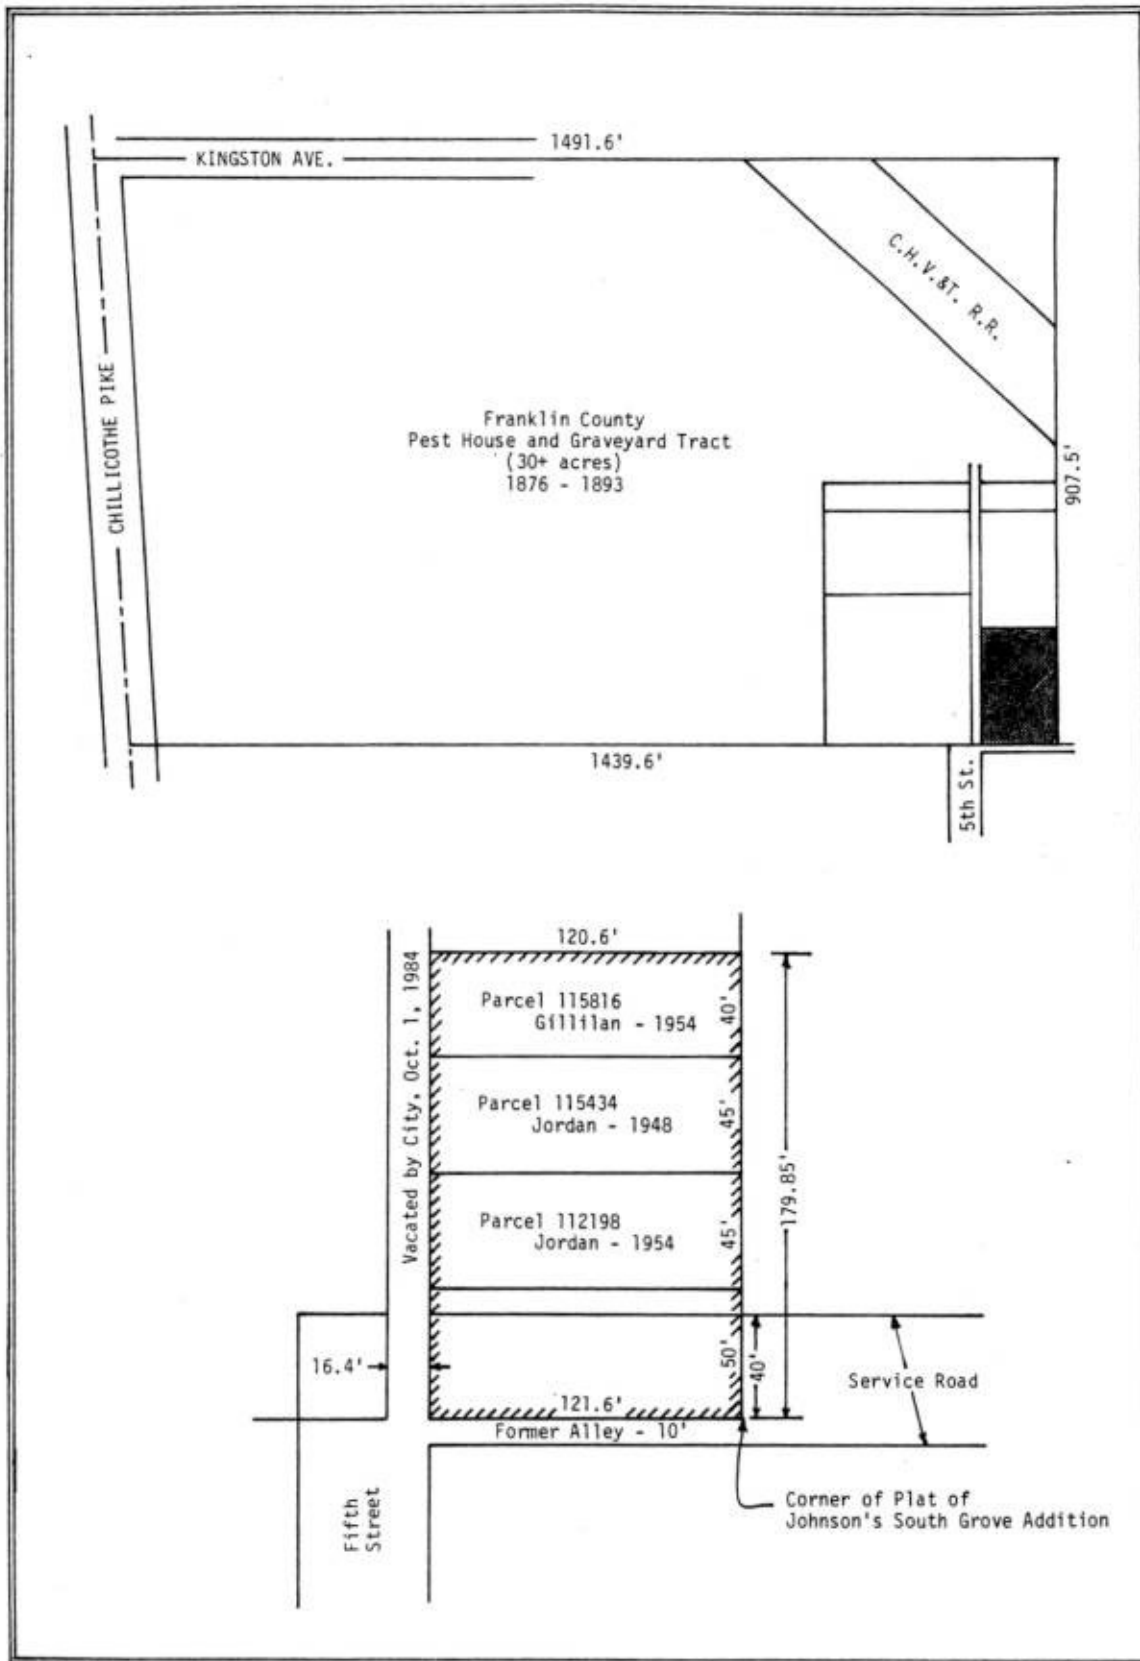

On March 5, 1877, Mr. Rodenfels introduced a resolution, subsequently passed, which declared that the fence around the graveyard was almost gone and that council did "not deem it advisable to retain said property for graveyard purposes." All persons having friends buried there were requested to remove the remains and a committee was to determine whether the property would be better laid out into lots and sold or retained as a park.²³ Progress in this direction seems to have come to a halt after Mr. Rodenfels' resignation from council in 1878 and was not resumed for another three years.

In September of 1881 council decided to keep the East Graveyard but declared it to be a park, named South Park (renamed Livingston Park in 1884). A committee was formed to have the remains of the dead and the tombstones removed.²⁴ It would appear that complete records of the graveyard still existed at that time, for the newspapers gave the precise number of 2,344 graves then remaining.²⁵

The removals were made by Frederick Doell (the sexton) and John Stone, with a large body of workmen, all under the superintendence of John Schneider. The work went on from August 14 through September, 1882, and beyond. The total cost to the city was $2,963.59.²⁶ When the work began, in the earliest-used portion in the northeast corner, the graves were all found to be full, but the Daily Dispatch speculated that such would not be the case when the workmen came to the interments made after the medical college had been established here. As of September 11, the papers reported 1,850 removals completed, but no final figure seems to have been published.

The newspapers of the time mention only Greenlawn as the destination of the removed remains from the East Graveyard, but the city council minutes as published in the later papers mention payment to Greenlawn of only $419 for three lots, ten graves, and seventy boxes buried on private lots there. One has to suspect that those seventy boxes reburied on private lots at Greenlawn must have been large ones, containing the remains of many persons other than the families of those on whose lots they were buried, unless many were also moved to the new South Graveyard. This is suggested by the discovery there in 1984 of the tombstone of John Heyl, who died in 1854 and would logically have been originally interred in the East Graveyard. Lot 27 of Section 28 in Greenlawn Cemetery, the lot owned by the city where the ten boxes were buried, is as barren and unmaintained now as the East Graveyard was in its day, with no markers of any kind and in need of filling.

It is said that many of the tombstones remained in the East Graveyard until as late as 1959, when they were dumped in Alum Creek to hold the banks in place during that year's flood. One tombstone which survived until recently marked the resting place of Catharine, wife of G. W. Free, and her two children,²⁷ but a newer marker for her, apparently a replacement, is now located in Greenlawn Cemetery.

LATER HISTORY OF THE COUNTY GRAVEYARD

The greater portion of the thirty acre tract purchased by the county commissioners in 1876 was not used as a graveyard. The graveyard itself was in the southeast corner of the tract. From later deeds one can infer that it measured about 121 by 180 feet, about one half acre.²⁸ The board leased the land to N. Anthony for one year²⁹ in 1877; in December of 1881 it gave permission for the City of Columbus to erect its pest house there (which was completed in January).³⁰ In 1884 the board's minutes note that "The Board have gone to the Franklin County graveyard in regard to the renting of the same."³¹

The report of the Columbus City Infirmary Director for the year ending in April of 1882 is the one piece of documentary evidence which affirms that the land purchased by the county for graveyard purposes was actually used as such:

The "City Cemetery," which is located some three miles south of the city, and which is owned jointly by the city and county, as I am informed, stands in need of some care. It lies in one corner of a large field, and is in an almost totally neglected condition. It frequently occurs that one who never begged his bread, or lacked of ought that was honest, is laid away in this neglect spot, through the strange vicissitudes of life. There may be some among us who cannot show a guarantee that his dust may not repose in these unclassic and uncared for yards of mother earth.

I would therefore recommend that authority be granted to some one, who may act in conjunction with the county authorities, to enclose the public burying ground with a suitable fence, and the grounds kept clear of rubbish and weeds, and that the head of each grave be marked with a simple board. Or, in lieu of this, a record be kept of the number of the grave and its contents.³²

This indicates that within these few years after, its establishment, the county graveyard was used only or primarily for the burial of paupers or others who could not afford to be buried at Green Lawn. This was no doubt due to the presence of the pest house there; most people tried to avoid that place of disease and this made the graveyard site undesirable.

The opening of the new County Infirmary near Alum Creek, with its own cemetery, made the High street property unnecessary. At a meeting of the county commissioners held on May 18, 1893 the entire tract was declared to be surplus and on the same day was sold to Frank J. Reinhard and Jared P. Bliss for $12,000.³³ The tract was platted as Johnson's South Grove Addition³⁴ in 1898 but the lots did not sell well and most of the plat was vacated in 1912.³⁵ The Johnsons then sold off the land in larger tracts but were unable to sell the graveyard until 1938.³⁶ A lane entering the group of new tracts from the south ran along the west side of the graveyard. This eventually became Fifth street. By this time the tombstones, what few there were, had disappeared and the fact that it had been a graveyard was being forgotten.

The graveyard was divided into four lots on which houses were built beginning in 1950. Graves were found when the basements were dug for these houses. With the construction of State Route 104 east of High street in the 1960's, a new entrance to Fifth street was needed. To serve this purpose, the southern-most of the lots which had been formed from the graveyard was partially paved and is now used as a street. In 1984, a tombstone dated 1854, apparently moved from the East Graveyard in 1882, was found a short distance below the surface of the ground.³⁷

The "Colored" Graveyard

As stated in the history of the North Graveyard, in 1841 Columbus City Council ordered "that the Colored People be buried under the Direction of the North Sexton, and in the same manner that Strangers are buried." This order probably meant that Black residents of Columbus were denied the purchase of family lots and were forced to be buried in the same single grave section as paupers and unknown persons, undoubtedly the most undesirable portion of the graveyard.

In response to this treatment, a group of Black Columbusites established their own graveyard in Franklin Township in 1849.¹ On October 18, 1849 articles of agreement were signed whereby Henry Briggs promised to sell to David Sullivan and "others in behalf of the subscribers" a four-acre tract of land in return for payment of $200 over the next six months. The deed specifically stated that the agreement was made "for the purpose of purchasing a place for a burying ground of Franklin County, Ohio." David Sullivan, whose name is the only one appearing as a purchaser in the deed, was a forty-eight year old, Virginia-born, Black shoemaker, who lived with his family in the Fifth Ward, on the south side of Columbus.²

The plot of ground was located on the west side of Brown Road and a little way south of the southern end of Green Lawn Cemetery, which had been opened the previous summer; the site is now bisected by Ransburg avenue. It measured about 356 feet along Brown Road and its average depth was 285 feet. The 1856 county map calls the plot the "Colored Grave Yard" and in the 1872 county atlas it is labeled simply "GY" for graveyard.

In 1872, according to Studer's history, "a section of the grounds was set apart for the use of colored citizens" at Greenlawn Cemetery. This was the western part of Section 27, which at that time was in the corner of the property. This obviated the need for a separate graveyard for the Black citizens and a few years later their private burial ground was cleared and sold.

In 1881³ the Trustees of the "Union Cemetery of the County of Franklin and State of Ohio" filed suit in the Franklin County Common Pleas Court against the heirs of Henry Briggs and successfully quieted the title to the plot of ground. (The decree was dated Dec. 15, 1882.) At first it appeared from this suit that the ground had somehow become the property of the Union Cemetery Association in Clinton Township, but no deed or other instrument transferring the property to that body could be found. The common pleas case was little help in solving this apparent riddle, because the original case files have all been disposed of and this case was never copied into the Complete Record.

The "Colored" Graveyard

The trustees who sold the property in 1885 were John F. Ward, Albert Baker, Willis Mitchell, Jeremiah Dickey, Charles Davis, and William H. Roney. An investigation into the origins of the Union Cemetery in Clinton Township turned up its record of incorporation in Franklin County Incorporation Record I, page 334, and dated 1879. The names of its thirteen trustees, listed in the incorporation record, were entirely different from those in the deed of sale of the "Colored" graveyard. It became obvious that there were two "Union Cemetery" associations in the county. Upon checking the 1880 census and city directory, all of the men mentioned above as trustees appear to be Black citizens of Columbus, living in the area of Fifth and Sixth, Broad, Gay, and Long streets. These men apparently represent the group of families for whom the Franklin Township land was purchased in 1849. Several of them were owners of lots in the western portion of Section 27 at Greenlawn.

On December 22, 1885, the trustees sold the land to John M. Reaver.⁴ John Reaver farmed the land for a few years and in 1892 sold it to Joseph M. Briggs. In 1895 Briggs subdivided it into "Briggs' Brown Road Subdivision," the lots on both sides of Ransburg avenue near Brown Road.

The graves and monuments in the old graveyard were moved onto privately owned lots in the western portion of Section 27 at Greenlawn, only about a thousand feet from their original resting place. The names on the tombstones and monuments in Section 27 which appear to have been moved in from the old Union Cemetery are included in the Consolidated List, along with a few removals noted in the lot book. When the WPA undertook a survey of cemeteries in the county, a tiny tract of just 0.005 acre (barely enough for ten graves!) 200 feet from Brown road was located and identified as the graveyard of the "Colored Cemetery Association."

Green Lawn Cemetery

Green Lawn Cemetery was conceived and established as a replacement for and improvement upon the North Graveyard of the City of Columbus. The "Green Lawn Cemetery of Columbus" was incorporated by the State Legislature in March of 1848. The first parcel of property of the present grounds, some 39 acres at the Brown Road entrance, was purchased in March of 1849 and the first lots were soon laid out. The first interment was that of a child of A. F. Perry, on July 7, 1849. The first monument erected was that of Olive Clark, wife of William G. Deshler, whose remains were removed from the North Graveyard to Section C, Lot 20 in October, 1849. A total of 247 removals were made to Green Lawn from other graveyards by January, 1858. The oldest marker now at Green Lawn appears to be that of Elizabeth, wife of Nathan Goodale, who died in 1809 and was originally buried at the Franklinton graveyard; this marker is also in Section C.

The Green Lawn Cemetery Association is known by researchers as far away as New Jersey as one of the most careful of record-keepers. Even so, complete records were not kept of all of the removals which were made from the City graveyards. In order to find as many as possible of these removals, the author has walked through the older portions of Green Lawn, sections A through 38, making notes of any inscriptions which were or which appeared to be too early to represent original interments. While walking through the sections and while looking at the Association's lot books, other interesting features of these older sections were noticed, which are here called to the attention of the researcher.

Replacement lots for North Graveyard lot owners are located in:

- Section M, northwest corner
- Section N, southeast end
- Section Q
- others are scattered throughout the grounds

Replacement lots for North Graveyard single-grave sections are:

- Section L, lots 96, 97, 98, 100, 102, and 104
- Section R, lots 73 through 80
- Section 27, lots 74 and 75

City of Columbus lots are:

- Section 28, lots 27-29, for East Graveyard removals
- Section 28, lot 52, removals from the Kerr tract of the North Graveyard

Other "corporate" lot owners noted were:

- State of Ohio, Section D lot 4
- Methodist Church, Section D lot 2
- A large I.O.O.F. lot in Section F, lot 1 etc.
- I.O.O.F. Central Lodge #23, Section I lot 2
- Mt. Vernon Commandery No. 1, Knights Templars of Col's, circular lot A in Section J - Deaf & Dumb Institute, Section Q lots 89-92
- Franklin County Ex-Soldiers and Sailors, Section 28 center
- Franklin County Children's Home (1880-1900), Section 28 lot 10

Other areas of interest:

- The "Colored" section west of the concrete walk in Section 27
- The Sullivant family lot in the northwest quarter of Section P
- The oldest group of military graves in the circular area in the north-center of Section M

Single grave burials were made as follows:

- Lots in Section H, ca. 1853 to 1871
- Section "North of S," beginning ca. 1863. Note: An oral tradition exists that removals from one of the City graveyards were made into this section. However, no documentation of such could be found; it appears to be simply a single grave section.
- Section M, northeast corner, beginning ca. 1872
- Section 27, lots 51-54, 63-73, and 76-81
- Section 29, beginning ca 1878
- Section 33, beginning ca 1882
- Section 34, beginning ca 1886

There are many interesting and beautiful old monuments at Green Lawn; anyone familiar with the history of Columbus can enjoy walking through the well-kept grounds, recognizing familiar names and recalling bits of history and biography.

Consolidated List

of Lot Owners, Deaths, Interments, Removals, and Inscriptions

Some thought was given to providing separate lists of lot owners, chronological interments, and the like for each of the graveyards in a reproduction of what the city's original records must have been like. This may have been of interest from a historian's point of view. However, considering that the main users of the data would be genealogists and that use of the data by this group should be facilitated, the best course seemed to be the creation of a consolidated list of all data for all of the city graveyards. One needs only to consult this list for direct references to family names and the index for cross-references, rather than several lists.

Source References

The full references for sources abbreviated in the consolidated list can be found in the "Bibliography and Sources" listing in the front of the book. Three major sources require further explanation for proper understanding of the data presented: the newspapers, infirmary records, and Green Lawn Cemetery records.

- Newspapers. The references to death notices in newspapers were based on Death Records from Old Newspapers, Franklin County, Ohio, July 17, 1811 to Oct. 18, 1832, compiled by Rosalie R. Haddox and Lorena B. Adamson, "published" in typescript by the Columbus Chapter, NSDAR. (A copy at the State Library of Ohio was used.) Only notices in this work of deaths in or near Columbus or Franklinton were used. Added to these are a few notices in the Ohio State Journal during gaps in the above compilation and all later notices in the same paper up to January of 1839, when the East Graveyard was being purchased.

- Franklin County Infirmary. Deaths at the County Infirmary, formerly the Poor House, were abstracted from the earliest extant Register of the infirmary, dated 1866 to 1882, which is available on microfilm GR-1245 at the Ohio Historical Society. The register lists each person's name, date of admission, age at admission, place of birth, and other data, along with date of departure or death. Deaths there up to the date of closing of the East and opening of the South Graveyard are in this consolidated list as probable interments in the East Graveyard (except for two men for whom tombstones were noticed at Green Lawn and who the office indicated to be original interments there). Many of the persons who died after that time were probably interred in the South Graveyard, but these are not included here since they properly belong to county, not city, institutional graveyard history. The ages listed here are approximate, estimated on the basis of age at time of admission. January of 1839, when the East Graveyard was being purchased.

- Green Lawn Cemetery. As mentioned above, many sections of the cemetery were "read" for old inscriptions and the books containing lot-by-lot records were examined for notes and clues of removals from the city graveyards. Readings are indicated by "ts" for an individual tombstone or "mt" for a family monument, followed by the words "Green Lawn" and the section and often the lot number. Data found in the association's books are indicated by the words "lot book." Any references to possible removals were then checked against the association's card file, which should have a card for each original interment but only contains cards for a relatively few removals into that cemetery. Many early tombstone readings and odd references in the books turned out to be original interments and were eliminated by this check. A few removals were also found in the cards, however, which had not been noted elsewhere. The notation "(Not in card file?)" indicates that no card for the interment was found at Green Lawn and the probability is high that the original interment was at a city graveyard. In any case, if no reference to an individual sought is found in this book, one should still check the Green Lawn card file. (A microfilm copy is available at the Franklin County Genealogical Society.) One additional notation on the source is "M. Cmr. John Graham Lot." This indicates that the tombstone is on one of the lots purchased by John Graham, acting under court order as master commissioner, as a place for removals from single grave sections at the North Graveyard.

Following each name is a code indicating the original graveyard of interment. These are:

- F - Franklinton Graveyard
- N - North Graveyard
- E - East Graveyard
- U - Union or Colored Graveyard

- S - South Graveyard
- ? - (alone) Place of original interment unknown but probably in one of the city graveyards
- ? - (with F, N, etc.) Indicates probable but not proven place of original interment

With the N or E, additional codes might be found:

- k - Kerr tract of North Graveyard
- d - Doherty tract of North Graveyard
- sgs - Single grave section, Doherty tract, North Graveyard
- ### - a lot number in the North or East Graveyard

The arrangement of data for a typical listing is indicated below.

Notes: -In this case, a cross-reference under the name Elvira Stewart would be found in the index.

-It is presumed that she was interred in lot 204, which was owned by her husband as shown in another listing.

- KRAAMER, Andrew E?
Died at the County Infirmary, 11/25/68, @ 38y.
- KRAUS, ---- N d
The old Mr. Kraus, father of the long-deceased tavern-keeper and baker, Georg Kraus, will be remembered by many of our older readers.
He was a jolly old man. On a journey to Winchester, on the wagon of the late brewer Bürk, he drowned many years ago in Alum Creek and it was eleven days before his body was found. The body was so swollen in the water that the boots could not be removed from his feet and he was buried in them. When the remains were disinterred a few days ago the boots were found to be perfectly well preserved.
- Der Westbote Apr. 27, 1872
- KRAUS, George N d
Also the grave of Georg Kraus was opened, who died in the year 1845; only the skeleton of the once so vital man remains, whom so many of our older readers knew. Where one now finds Theobald's, Schroll's, and Pfaff's places of business, Mr. Krauss held the first and at that time only tavern in Columbus, with which a bakery and dance-hall was combined. How often have you, who are now old, danced and turned there in cheerful, high-spirited youth.

How peaceful is the closing scene
When virtue yields its breath
How wealthy beams the smile serene
Upon the cheek of death.
The Christian's hope no fear can blight
No pain his peace destroy
He views on high the realms of light
Of pure and boundless joy.
Oh who can gaze with heedless sigh
On scenes as fair as this
Who but acclaims then let me die
And be my end like his.

Addendum II

Information Supplied by Genealogy Researcher W. Louis Phillips

Sherman Peck died at the American House at State & High streets in August or September, 1839. His estate paid $2.00 to John Copcutt for digging his grave. This implies that he was buried in the North Graveyard.
